Every detail of the Loew program, as used in and around the metropolitan area, is handled from the home office publicity department. The house manager has nothing to worry about, except to secure new names for the mailing list. And, incidentally, those who turn up their noses at large and expensive mailing lists should remember that here is a mighty successful circuit using hundreds of thousands of names each week as regular as clock work.

MANAGER SAM FRIEDMAN of the Publix-Capitol in Pottsville, Pa., is one of the few remaining showmen to emphasis his program with a colored cover.

This one is particularly attractive and really makes an impression when one opens it up. Another good point to mention, is, the finer-than-usual brand of stock used for this house organ. There is entirely too much of thin, cheap stock being used by theatres who can well afford the little additional cost for coated stock.

As for the program itself; your own perusal will reveal how neat and cleancut the entire job is. The house staff; policy; advertising; program of attractions with cast of characters; coming week's attractions, etc.; not forgetting the advance plug for "Free Soul."

It might pay interested showmen to communicate with Friedman to get some "dope" on the cost of his fine programs. Especially the slant on a colored cover. We are quite sure that he is not spending too great a sum for this added appearance.

Ed Hart Ballyhooed 'Daddy' With Flock Of Kids On Stilts

For a street bally on "Daddy Long Legs," Edgar Hart, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Astoria, Oregon, constructed several pairs of stilts and engaged a number of kids to walk around the city for three days. Lest the stunt imply any hardship on the youngsters, let us state that enough were engaged to give relays to each other during parading hours.

On the outside of each stilt, where the foot-rest is located, he nailed a good sized wall board shield, carrying name of star, title and play dates. Then he turned the first detachment of the kid loose for their tour through the busy districts. The boys not only got a big kick out of the advertising they were doing, but the stilt idea grew until many other kids were building them all over town.

As a result of the boost given this picture through use of the above stunt the house record was broken during the run of this picture and Hart suggests that the stilts can be used as a bally for any picture which suggests "elevation"—humorously adding, "even the high-society dramas." This is his first contribution to the Club and we will hope to hear often from this new member.

Fred Crosson Used Cooking School To Aid Matinee Trade

A good idea to combat the slump in matinee trade during the hot weather is submitted by J. Fred Crosson, manager of the Majestic and Riceland Theatres, Stuttgart, Kansas. He is one of the recently elected members of this Club and we want to state right here that if this is a sample of the kind of material he intends to pass on to his fellow Round Tablers, all of us are in line for some good live show tips.

Basing his idea on a generally accepted theory that cooking schools are to an extent responsible for slim attendance of women on certain matinee days, it occurred to him that a lesson in culinary art could be worked as an added attraction in connection with a regular performance. So he contacted the local gas and ice concerns and the So. Cotton Oil Co., the first two donating a stove and ice box and the latter furnishing the services of a cooking expert. These three firms, along with other merchants, paid the entire cost involved in the scheme. Churches were also tied in with the idea and the stove and ice box were presented to the one that had the largest attendance for the three days. Of course, in order to register the church it became necessary to buy a ticket.

The above is a brief description of the way the school was promoted and Fred states he'll be glad to give full details to any Club member who wants them. We can only add that his business was doubled during the time he carried out this stunt. He characterizes this first contribution as "submitting dues" for Club membership and that's just about what it amounts to. Here's hoping that this new member will continue to keep up his end.

O'CONNELL'S AVALON HOLDS PREMIERE!

The Mayor of the city and many prominent citizens turned out when Jack O'Connell's New Avalon Theatre was officially opened to a Toledo, Ohio, public. The American Legion unit acted as guard of honor escort to the Mayor's party and newspapers treated the affair as a gala event. Three bombs were exployed at 8.30 to announce the opening. A huge crowd jammed the street to such an extent that cars and buses could not get through. The Avalon is a De Luxe neighborhood house. Ken Benson is manager.

EVERY STATE, CITY AND TOWN TO PARTICIPATE IN NINE MONTHS BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

(Editor's Note: Following our recent reference to this nation-wide celebration, we present, herewith, a portion of the Clip Sheet sent out by the Bicentennial Commission in Washington, D. C. Read this over carefully if you want to get a brief idea of what is being planned. Further information regarding this celebration, as well as literature, weekly clip sheets, and other important material, will be sent upon request to this Commission at their headquarters mentioned below.)

These points should be emphasized with respect to the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington next year:

1—It is sponsored by the United States Government: Congress created the George Washington Bicentennial Commission and the President of the United States is its chairman.

2—It will not be a world's fair or exposition, and it will not be held in any one place.

3—It will be a nation-wide, even a world-wide series of celebrations in which every state, city and town—every organization and institution, every home and individual—in this country, together with Americans and others in many foreign countries, will participate. Every community is expected to plan and carry out its own program of events, in cooperation with the United States Commission and the State Commissions.

4—It will last from Washington's Birthday, February 22, 1932, to Thanksgiving Day, November 24, 1932, with special local and national celebrations everywhere on all holidays, anniversaries, or other days which can be connected with the life of George Washington.

5—While the ceremonies on February 22 should be especially elaborate and impressive, as marking the actual Two Hundredth Anniversary of George Washington's Birth, arrangements also should be made for public gatherings, pageants, plays, processions, musical festivals, tableaux and other events at various times during the entire period of more than nine months. Every program should relate to the great life and work of the First President and Founder of the Republic. On Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day and other national and local holidays or anniversaries there should be special programs, but the celebration should not be confined to these days.

6—It will take time to prepare the local programs and arrange for the local celebrations. The United States Commission urges mayors and other officials of every city and town in the country to appoint George Washington Bicentennial Commissions or Committees, in order to prepare for the events of the Bicentennial Year.

7—All organizations and institutions of whatever character—civic, business, labor, educational, religious, fraternal, literary, social and others—are urged to plan for a "George Washington Year" in 1932.

8—The United States George Washington Bicentennial Commission, Washington Building, Washington, D. C., will send literature and suggestions for local programs to any committee, organization or group that will write for them.

Roy Smart Had A Novel Co-Op Page On Recent Picture

Roy Smart of the Paramount Theatre, High Point, N. C., put over a new twist on an old plan of selling space co-operatively to plug "The Front Page."

One of the inside pages of the Enterprise looked identically like a front page with a caption in large bold face type spread across the entire width of page, news articles, etc.

Instead of using co-operative ads to fill a page, this page was written up in story form, playing up the merchandise of some seventeen merchants. In fact the only ad appearing on the page was one on the picture, "Front Page," itself.

The page also presented itself as a contest to all those wishing to participate with the hope of winning one or more guest tickets to the theatre.

Contestants were required to make a list of the seventeen firms represented on the page, and listing opposite each of them one item of service or for sale. Completeness, neatness and correctness were considered in awarding the prizes.

It's been quite a while since we last published an account of Roy's activities but we were well aware of the fact that he was stepping along at his usual fast pace so we were patient and just waited until he had time to get around to it. We're sure some more stuff from him will be forthcoming soon.

CARROLL JOINS PARAMOUNT-SKOURAS!

Winding up two active years as publicity director for Warner-Hudson County Theatres in New Jersey, Charlie Carroll resigned to become executive assistant to George Skouras who operates a string of about a hundred theatres for Paramount-Skouras.

The Club pages have reflected many unusual stunts from the creative brain of this smart showman and those who were privileged to know him and his work are well acquainted with the type of stuff he can engineer and see through to a successful conclusion.

Charles P. Carroll

His first assignment under Skouras will be to open four houses: Pittsburgh, Altoona, Greensburg and Johnstown, Pa. After these houses have been opened and started off for a big season he will return to Jersey. His future activities will be carried from time to time on these pages where his many friends will be able to follow his smart showmanship.

Burt Hoffman, formerly Carroll's assistant with Warner Bros., succeeds his retiring chief and should be able to carry on the fine work which he handled so well with Charlie for those Hudson county houses.

It is gratifying to watch these aggressive men climb the ladder, rung by rung, and we look forward to carrying many more announcements about Carroll and his fine brand of publicity and advertising.

Ben Cohen Tied-Up With Furniture Co. For A Herald Co-Op

Ben M. Cohen of the Capitol Theatre, Hazleton, Pa., tied up with a furniture merchant whereby "The Smiling Lieutenant" profited in lots of publicity.

The merchant distributed and paid for 5,000 heralds; the heralds carrying co-operative copy and also a jumbled contest. To the persons properly assembling the pieces of Chevalier and bringing them to the store received a guest ticket to see the picture. The merchant purchased 130 tickets at the regular admission price.

Always count on Ben for a new slant in show-selling. He serves it on a silver platter and makes 'em like it too. No wonder the Capitol is keeping pace with the rest of the houses up in that part of the country. Send us lots more Cohen, we always can use it for the benefit of those thousands of other showmen.

Blanchard Called Public Attention To Film By Dummy

J. M. Blanchard of the Publix-Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa., called the public's attention to "Daddy Long Legs" by placing a dummy across the street in front of the theatre.

The dummy part was of the body only, showing him wearing a coat and a derby. On one sleeve was lettered "Daddy" and on the other "Legs." Strips of muslin were used for the legs.

The strips of muslin were unusually long giving the impression that the dummy was stepping across the street as one leg rested on the theatre marquee and the other on the opposite side of the street, just as Stearn did in Pittston, Pa.

In any town where the manager can get away with a stunt of this kind it's bound to be sure-fire for attracting attention. Try it yourself next time a picture lends itself to such treatment. Blanchard got away with it and so can any other smart showman.

Another Naify Now Club Member; Did A Fast One On 'Skippy'

We've another member of the Naify clan with us at this writing and as a means of introducing him to his brother Club members we will tell you how he has put over a couple of recently played pictures. We refer to S. S. Naify, manager of the California and Mystic Theatres, Petaluma, Calif.

The Druids were holding their state convention when "Skippy" was shown in Petaluma and during the run this organization held a large parade that attracted attention from every one in town. Naify got together a lot of kids, carrying banners that advertised the picture, theatre and playdates, and dressed in typical "Skippy" costumes they followed the parade and mingled with the onlookers. This stunt captured a lot of on-the-spot publicity which was splendidly reflected at the box office.

For those who have yet to play "Fifty Million Frenchmen" he thinks that a gag he used can be profitably employed. One of the members of the theatre staff was dressed in a long coat, dark trousers and tall hat and strolled along the thoroughfares carrying a suitcase which had a habit of coming open whenever the carrier approached a group of people. Ladies wearing apparel of all description fell out of the bag, together with heralds advertising the picture.

There's no doubt that Naify's quick thinking on that stunt with the kids and convention earned some corking publicity and his suggestion for the other picture is another good one for any one who had this one to play off. He's using a plan for a warm weather business booster right now which he states will convince a patron he ought to attend a theatre when an auto ride beckons. We'll tell you more about this one in a later issue.

JEFF LAZARUS' EDITORIAL SCRAP

(From the Hughes-Franklin House Organ, "Now.")

What is it?
When is it?
Where is it?

If you haven't told your public those three things about what you're selling, you might as well tell them nothing. An ad that doesn't include them all is incomplete . . . there's no telling how many of its readers will be lost because one or more of those questions was in their minds, but remained unanswered.

That trinity, together making the obiter dicta of show advertising, first pronounced by P. T. Barnum, is still the daddy of all advertising rule in our business. Once you have these three principles established in your copy—and they're so easily established—then you must turn to the next most important requirements. These, while not so fundamental as "what," "when" and "where," are, nevertheless, of primary importance. . . . They too are answers; answers you must furnish to other unasked questions. They are: why should anyone come to see your show?

Now, the way to answer the first is to fill your ads with reasons why readers will read it. First of these is inviting appearance. For that you must have a clean, symmetrical layout, well spotted through grouping of copy and illustrations, and by the same token of course, grouping of white space. You must have an eye-catcher, either in the form of illustration or spot catchline. With all of these, your answer to the question of why any one will read the ad will be because it stands out from the page; it stands away from the other combined advertisements and it is good to look at. Anything that's good to look at, gets looked at!

To answer the second question, to provide reasons why people should come to your show—that must be in your copy. It can be in your illustration, but after all, legs have been used so much, clinches have been slung about the drama page so frequently, dimples have been played up so prominently, that they are all more or less commonplace. We have seen drama pages with a dozen theatres all using a half tone of two lovers in hypnotic embrace. You must use illustrations, true, and you can get some good ones. But only in rare instances will the illustration do more than hint at the atmosphere of the picture. That is part of your message and must be used, but the big difference between ordinary ads and extraordinary ads is strong, sincere, simple, and (if possible), startling selling copy.

If you're worth running a theatre at all, you should have the knack and the habit of saying to yourself on every picture you run, why shall any of my neighbors come to see this one? There's a snare in every picture, a reason why some people will come to see it. That's the thing to dig out. That's the thing to use, and when you use it, it isn't necessary to use big words; don't try to be "eloquent." It is only necessary to talk to your people with your type, as you would talk to your chums; if over the bridge table, you wanted to tell them to see some particular picture that you'd seen and liked. . . . Write intimately, sincerely, like the announcer on the "Camel" radio hour talks. . . . That's what makes "selling" copy.

Is it a mystery you're selling? Say so. Is it action you're selling? Say so. Is it intrigue, adventure, jungle stuff?—whatever it is, make up your mind what it is and then put it down on paper, simply.

Have you ever noticed that the most important ingredient in enthusiasm is sincerity? Indeed. that's what MAKES enthusiasm.

Get that feeling into your copy. It's not enough to hand the "mat" and the names of the star and the picture scribbled on the back of an envelope, to the makeup man of your newspaper.

People are waiting to be sold. Auburn proved that. Lucky Strike proved that. Sell 'em. Try this: before ever you write an advertisement, before ever you put your pencil to your paper, before ever you call up the composing room or the display desk, say to yourself, what is it? where is it? when is it? why should they read my copy? why should they come to see what I am selling?

Then write your copy, and you'll have an "ad" my son!

Grist Made Tie-Up With A Department Store For Tickets

Willis W. Grist, Jr., of Paramount Theatre, Lynchburg, Va., tied up with a department store on a stunt that resulted in lots of publicity for "The Miracle Woman."

The store printed 200 tickets which were valid for the first show of "The Miracle Woman." These tickets were being sold for one-cent each to feminine patrons only.

The store advertised these tickets by carrying copy relative thereto in a box in their regular ads.

When the store opened Monday morning at 9 o'clock there was approximately 500 women storming the doors and almost wrecking the place in their endeavor to get tickets.

Much favorable comment resulted from this stunt; and the newspaper gave it an excellent write-up too, mentioning picture, theatre, cast and playdates.

About thirty local ministers together with their wives were invited to the showing of the picture. Their favorable comments also helped in putting the picture over.

No one will deny the excellent judgment used by Grist in the way he handles himself and his theatre by virtue of this type of exploitation. Other showmen would have little to worry about it they got behind things the same way. Keep up this pace, Willis, and we'll predict a great future for you in your organization.

——Make This Our Prosperity Season!——

Schmidt's Ballyhoo With An Orchestra Created Publicity

Wm. E. Schmidt of the Capitol Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., put on a ballyhoo that created lots of publicity for "Honeymoon Lane."

A local transfer company was contacted for the use of one of their trucks and after this was gotten, a local orchestra was sold on the idea of playing on the truck for the advertising it would derive from the stunt.

In order to add some comedy and give the people something different, Schmidt procured a horse and an old buggy; a man and woman in wedding clothes riding behind the truck ballyhoo. The buggy was reputed to be about 100 years old.

The truck and buggy traveled through the streets of town and would stop occasionally at busy intersections for a short concert.

Not only was the ballyhoo used on the street but it traversed the parks, beaches, ball parks and picnic places and other places where there was an assembly of people. Of course, the truck was appropriately bannered—playing up the picture and play.

What more can be said about Schmidt? You've heard us rave about this showman's fine work so often that you'll think he's related to us. But he is just another one of the Round Table gang and mighty glad we are to have him.

Smith Made Deal With Bus Line To Sell 'Arizona'

Sidney Smith of the Capitol Theatre, Scranton, Pa., tied up with a bus line in advertising "Arizona."

The bus line carried banners on their busses stating that two-round-trip bus tickets were to be given away; the tickets good for trips to Arizona or California.

The winners were determined by the number of their stubs; the numbers being drawn on the stage at one of the evening performances of "Arizona." The stunt was put over at no cost to the theatre.

Seems like we've encountered this same Sidney Smith somewhere in the wilds of New England; are we right Sid? But right or wrong you are giving Scranton a neat sample of showmanship. If you keep it up we're sure you'll be heard from in other important spots for Publix.

——Business Is Going To Be Great!——

Crivello Won Out On "Politics" In Face Of Big Odds

Some tough competition in the shape of an always well-attended Chautauqua faced Joe Crivello, manager of the New Capitol Theatre, Litchfield, Ill., when he played "Politics" but when we record that his campaign on this picture set a new house record you'll agree, in view of the opposition, that he came through with flying colors.

His date was set about the time this picture was reaping a lot of publicity in St. Louis journals, so he took advantage of the fact that these newspapers enjoy a large circulation in and around Litchfield by getting busy with the erection of a special sign atop the theatre building. Letters were cut out of pressed wood and surfaced with silver glass tinsel, producing a dazzling display under a flood light borrowed for the occasion. The total cost of sign amounted to less than $15 and advance arrangements were made for its use on later dates in nearby towns, thus pro-rating this cost.

An Open Letter TO Mayor David Davis
LITCHFIELD, ILL.
Dear Sir:—
Inasmuch as your attitude toward women's rightful place in public office is not generally understood, we are asking that, as a matter of courtesy, you surrender your office as mayor, to a woman, for two days—
We nominate on the Laugh Ticket
Marie Dressler
for Mayor of Litchfield
Tomorrow and Thursday
WE'LL RUN THIS TOWN RIGHT!

The balance of his work was confined to generous distribution of heralds, three sheets and two teaser and display ads in the local newspaper, the latter of particular value to Crivello inasmuch the paper has 1,560 subscribers in a population of about 6,000 people. This means that the paper reached almost everyone in the town. Its total circulation is 3,400 and covers every town within a radius of 25 miles, thus explaining his interest in this medium.

We are reproducing a portion of a large display ad run one day before opening and would have used all of it had its proportions been practical. It ran two columns for almost the entire depth and below the copy, "We'll run this town right," appeared a large cut of Dressler and Moran; this statement being signed by Polly Moran's name as campaign manager. Name of theatre, title and play dates followed.

By building his ad around the Mayor, whose name meant as much if not more in that town than either of the star's, Crivello could not fail to arrest the reader's attention. Of course, you've got to know your Mayors to pull a stunt of this kind and Joe evidently knows his. Most managers do, if they get around. So, we're passing this one along for other Club members to use if they see fit, inasmuch as it is looked upon as one of the highlights on the above outlined campaign. We also hope to hear some more about this manager's future activities in show business. He's one of several entrants in the M-G-M contest for outstanding work on this picture and he feels that his campaign helped immeasurably to hang up a record gate; hence, once again we wish another contestant luck.

That Sure Was Some Battle That Harold Rice Won in Pueblo

The artillery warfare angle strongly appealed to Harold E. Rice, manager of the Rialto and Palm Theatres, Pueblo, Colo., when "Chances" was booked for the former house and he immediately set the necessary machinery in motion.

First he contacted the head of the National Guard unit in his city and secured permission to place in front of his theatre a French "75," a caisson, an anti-aircraft gun, machine guns and numerous fire control instruments used by field artillery.

Harold E. Rice

Then he paid a call on his city editor and tied the paper in with an idea to stage a defense demonstration against an imaginary enemy in front of the theatre. The newspaper liked the idea and after considerable conversation with city officials permission was secured from the fire and police departments to go ahead with the show.

Lights were turned out on the theatre front on the night of demonstration and bombs which could be heard for miles around were fired from the roof of the theatre. Red fuses were used to light the front and a giant searchlight played its beam in the sky, as round after round of ammunition was fired from the artillery pieces, manned by Guardsmen under the direction of two lieutenants and two sergeants. Five hundred rounds were shot off during the two "battles."

Our reply to the above is a quotation from his letter: "People are still wondering how we got away with it." But a further answer is that it got the business. It was estimated that 2,500 people gathered the first night, with practically the same number on hand for the second demonstration. The police had to rope off the street to handle the crowd and the box office receipts certainly justified the ballyhoo. Ten stories made the newspaper and broke on front page four times—and the stunt made people talk about the theatre. So there you are.

Before closing we'd also like to call attention to an ad used by Rice on "Broadminded." It measured about four by four inches and copy started off reading: "Rialto Staff Won't Work—Doorman Doubled Up—Ushers Rolling in Aisles—Operators With Tears of Laughter Streaming Down Their Their Cheeks"—and had a mat of Joe E. Brown on the right hand side, with enough white space all around to set the whole ad off. Examples of these sort of ads have been mentioned from time to time in these columns and it is our idea that the same kind can be profitably adapted to advertising pictures in the smaller communities. The make up and copy is 'way different from regular run of material commonly used and we believe it will make readers sit up and take notice.

Rice is a new member of this Club and we're mighty glad to hear about what he's doing out his way. Like many a manager who sends along his application he admits that he's been following this department for a long time. Now he intends to play ball.

BOUCHER AND MORRIS MERIT PROMOTIONS!

We always get a great kick out of announcing anybody's promotion, but when it involves such loyal Round Table members as Frank Boucher and Walter Morris, it's more than an announcement; it's a celebration.

Boucher, until recently, was the district manager of the Maryland section for the Warner Bros. Theatre, operating out of the Washington (D. C.) Divisional headquarters. He now takes over the entire district in the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia, with Lynchburg as his office.

This aggressive showman happens to be one of those men who never forgot that he too was once, "just a theatre manager." His ability to train men has earned for him an enviable reputation and the majority of managers down his way were brought into the organization as assistants and promoted to house management jobs as fast as they qualified.

We are not worried a bit about Frank's ability to make good in this greatly enlarged district now under his jurisdiction. We are looking forward to a further promotion for him and what's more, we know he will win it.

Walter Morris is one of the men Boucher brought into the Warner outfit as manager of their Metropolitan Theatre in Baltimore. He soon proved that he was not only a capable showman, but a common-sense business man as well, and there are few who can claim to be both.

As a fitting reward for his fine work in Baltimore, Walter now steps into Boucher's shoes as district manager for the Maryland houses. After working with Frank for so many months, it should be an easy task for him to fit right into the situation and carry on where Boucher left off.

Here's wishing both of these fine showmen lots of luck and all the success they so well deserve.

Talbot Put Over Co-Op In Colors To Sell 'Politics'

Robert B. Talbert of the Ritz Theatre, Columbia, S. C., put over a co-operative page in two colors to advertise Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in "Politics."

The co-operative page offered prizes to persons willing to sit down and do a little thinking. For the person who turned in the most words, using only the letters in the title of the picture, was awarded $5.00 in gold. The 2nd prize winner received six guest tickets; 3rd prize, four guest tickets and the next ten winners, one ticket each.

And of course the theatre ad occupied top center of page which carried forceful sales copy about picture as well as mentioning cast, title, theatre and playdates.

Talbert also had several boys on the streets carrying slogan placards announcing the campaign of Marie Dressler and Polly Moran in "Politics."

Hugh Smart Made Deal With Newspaper For Film Reviews

Hugh J. Smart worked the local newspaper to sponsor a critics contest for "The Smiling Lieutenant" playing at the Montgomery Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C.

Tickets were offered for the best review of the picture. This was announced with two stories and the winning review was published in paper together with names of the other winners. Although only a comparative few submitted reviews, the contest, however, gave the picture three good stories and an excellent review of the picture.

Arrangement were made with the district booker to send a telegram boosting the picture and stating that it was impossible for the theatre to run the picture six days (instead of three) because of previous books.

The local Postal Telegraph office made up 50 extra telegrams and these were "lost" in lobbies, on streets, in banks, post office, and other public places. A number of them were returned to the theatre, the persons finding them thinking that they had actually been lost.

"Smart" is more than just a name when one starts to discuss the doings of Roy or Hugh. "Exploitation Twins" would be a better title. But seriously Hugh, can't we get a lot more of your peppy showmanship? It's just what we are looking for and when we say "we," we mean some three thousand showmen.

NO DEPRESSION WITH THESE SHOWMEN!

BURTON HOFFMAN succeeds Charles P. Carroll as manager of the big Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., and believe us, Round Table members, if he sets the same pace in the way of contributions as Carroll, you can all look forward to receiving some interesting stories. As you no doubt know by this time, Carroll recently won an important promotion in show business. So we will hope that just as soon as Hoffman finds his way around over there, he'll advise us what's going on. In the meantime, the Club wishes him good luck.

CLYDE M. PRATT is another Hall Industries Theatre manager to join the ranks of this organization of showmen and we take this opportunity to introduce him as the manager of the Rialto Theatre in Alice, Texas. And what a spirit he displays in times which have not been entirely bereft of calamity howling. Says it's a grand game to be in; has a grand little house in a grand little town, with everything necessary to carry on successfully, and gleefully chirps: "We've never heard of your so-called depression." 'At-a-boy, Clyde, that's the stuff that puts a man and theatre over the top. Let's hear more from you.

A Third Circuit Seen Looming in The Antipodes

A third exhibiting circuit, worthy of consideration as formidable opposition to Union Theatres and Hoyts, looms on the horizon in Australia, with the decision of Fullers Theatres, Ltd., to expand its present circuit by a process of steady penetration. Under a scheme devised by Sir Benjamin Fuller, the company will gather in suburban theatres around Sydney for a start; expand later to other states; and then move into the country, adding the pick of theatres offered to its already valuable circuit.

To build a huge cinema on the site of the old City Hall in Brisbane, and a modern house in Lismore, important country centre of New South Wales, Fullers Metropolitans, Ltd., has already been floated on a nominal capital of $1,000,000, but, according to present intentions, building will stop there, and Fullers will concentrate on the acquisition of theatres already standing.

Has 69 Theatres

Sydney suburban theatres now held by Fullers number five; there are four more situated in Melbourne and Adelaide, in which revue and musical comedy are presented; and 60 in New Zealand.

By an official statement issued in Sydney by Sir Benjamin Fuller, it is evident that the company's expansion plans have, as much as anything else, been decided upon so that an increase in film buying power can be gained.

The prediction that Fullers will some day threaten the ascendancy of Hoyts and Union, is looked upon as a possibility.

Publix Signs One-In-Booth Pack In Colorado, Wyoming

Publix has signed an agreement with the operators' union calling for one man in the booth in all towns where it has theatres in Colorado and Wyoming, with the exception of Denver and Colorado Springs.

Fox has signed a similar agreement on the same basis or is at the moment negotiating.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE monthly list of selected pictures presented in this issue is the second installment of a new HERALD service designed to be of practical, and, we hope, far-reaching helpfulness to the theatreman. Written simply, and without the too finely drawn edge of analytical criticism that characterizes the professional critic's comments, this evaluation of pictures represents the sane average viewpoint of the review committees of the several national organizations engaged in this work.

The lists of endorsed pictures printed and distributed by national groups for distribution to their constitutents are frequently widely divergent in viewpoint and rating on outstanding productions. "The American Tragedy," for instance, was listed in class 4, by one organization—the lowest rating it could give to any picture, although an inconsequential pie-throwing variety of comedy had been awarded the higher praise of class 2. This inconsistency frequently has found its cause in organization policy, bias, or reviewers' personal tastes. The theatreman wishing to steer his bookings into a safe middle channel has had to compare the various lists before making his decision.

The SELECTIONS service which the HERALD offers you through this Department is, we hope, the solution to a difficulty. Reprints of the list as it appears in these pages will be mailed to you regularly, without cost to you, if you will address a postal card of request to this department. We will be glad to send the list also to your club leaders, or to interested persons in your community whose names and addresses you may send to us.

Children's Movie Clubs

A surprising number of letters have come in to us during the summer from theatremen as well as club women asking for help in the formation and development of juvenile motion picture clubs which have proven to be popular and profitable in many communities. In order to answer these inquiries in a definite, helpful way we have assembled all the data available on the subject from all the groups who have had success in this type of work. In some instances the Junior matinee idea has been popularized through a children's chorus.

Many theatre men from whom we have heard are working in harmony with the local school authorities to encourage the children to present pageants, songs and recitations in costume and individual acts at the Junior Matinee performances. In several cities the Brownie and the Mickey Mouse Clubs have been the means of winning enthusiastic response from children. One manager who claims that he has turned his juvenile shows into gold mines has an average attendance on Saturday afternoons of 1,300 to 1,500 youngsters, under the age of 14, who literally storm the doors of his theatre. Many of them bring their parents. As a result, the gross income of the theatre for an afternoon that ordinarily would do a modest business has increased more than 100 per cent.

We have communicated with him for working details of his methods, as we have with dozens of other groups whose juvenile plans have been financially successful. The result of this survey will be available to you in printed form within two weeks' time. The HERALD, in offering this series of printed pamphlets to its subscribers without additional cost, aims to develop through these columns a practical public relations service which the theatre man may use as a clearing house for many of his problems.

Macon Invites the Lawyers

The Better Films Committee of Macon, Ga., sent the following invitation to the lawyers of the city:

"Knowing that, naturally, you have an interest in courts and trials, attorneys and great speeches, examinations of witnesses and verdicts, we should like to call your attention to the screen version of Theodore Dreiser's 'An American Tragedy,' which plays the Capitol theatre Monday and Tuesday, August 31—September 1.

"Welford Beaton, editor and owner of The Film Spectator, says that Pichel's address to the jury is a forensic masterpiece, and in delivery and context is worthy of a permanent place in a record of great orations. That Middleton's examination of his client is an extraordinary example of vigor, intelligence and training. That the trial is dramatic throughout and that the courtroom sequence, perhaps half of the picture, is the outstanding triumph of talking picture mechanism.

"Of course, you know the story of 'An American Tragedy' too well for comment to be necessary. Through his able direction Von Sternberg has given it dignity. In it he has brought, with brilliance, the sound camera to the peak of its powers. By it he proves to what artistic heights screen art can reach.

"If you think the production is as good as Mr. Beaton says it is, we should like to know it."

Reduced versions of features, educationals and industrials will be handled by the organization. Rudolph Mayer, A. M. Miltenberg and Josiah Levin are president, vice-president and treasurer-secretary, respectively.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

Denver Denver

Week ending September 9

The stage show, "Hot Java," a Fanchon & Marco Idea, starts off in a snappy manner with a dozen girls in the line dressed as waiters. Their costumes are contrasts, black and white, with bright orange trays and caps. Their routine is the usual, a few dances in line and formations, with a little singing. For the other lineups they wear costumes reminding one of Joseph's coat of many colors, and they put more snap in their dancing.

Weston and Lyons start their act with a phoney mike, but work away from it and put over a good line of chatter, burlesque and singing. Miss Lyons, with her apparently double jointed hips and knees, keeps the audience roaring.

The Three Samuels, a trio of tap dancers, are precision artists. They attempt nothing spectacular but just give the crowd their fill of a clever routine. Appearing in what appears to be ushers' uniforms, they go through a group of dances, then they appear with popguns and sailors' caps and panic the audience with their military drills—dancing all the while.

Armanda Chirot sings a few songs of the Orient, and Noree, billed as Arabia's dancing daughter, is a versatile dancer.

Vincent Yerro does a few impersonations that are better than the originals, his mimicking of Harold Lloyd getting a big laugh.

The scenery, supposedly scenes from Java, is in keeping with the name of the unit, "Hot Java." The backdrop for the first part is a huge idol-like girlish figure, with a coffee urn in her hand. The second setting is beautiful, showing a few oriental buildings, while the third uses another idol painting for the background. The final flash is colorful, with everybody on the stage in the brightest things they can wear.

The overture is woven into a flower show being held by the theatre. There are flowers everywhere, beautiful and gorgeous. The orchestra and organ lift are banked with them, with Christmas tree lights among the bouquets. The overture, by Fred Schmitt and the orchestra, is called "A Basket of Flowers," and the selections include "Narcissus," "Whispering Flowers" and "Violets." Harry Wilson sings "Roses of Picardy" through a rose-lined megaphone, and George Roy plays a cornet solo, "Gift of Roses."

Brandy Orchestra Opens at Plaza in San Antonio

Brandy's Singing Orchestra opened Labor Day at the Plaza Hotel roof, in San Antonio, after a successful stay in Milwaukee, Chicago and St. Louis. The band also has appeared on both the Columbia and NBC networks. All members of the orchestra are soloists. Edward Brandenburg is leader. They will broadcast locally over the S. A. Light's radio station KTSA located in the same hotel. This is something new for Texas legitimate fans. The engagement is indefinite.

Denver Organist Replaced

Carl Bonne has taken over the organ assignment at the Denver Paramount from Armand Carlos. He is from the Miami, Fla., Olympia.

LEO WEBER

Here is a young fellow who has been doing plenty traveling in the past year and one who is now back in the old home roost. We shouldn't call the RKO Keith Memorial in Boston that because it is one of the finest and most beautiful theatres in the country and that is where Lee is now. He opens at the mammoth organ console of this house Friday (Sept. 11) and if his record in the houses in which he has played previously, while with the Paramount-Publix circuit, is a criterion, Boston can look for big things from this native son of hers. RKO and Bostonians in particular are getting a versatile young man in Leo Weber. He is not only an accomplished musician but a fine showman as well and Boston will find that out in due course.

Esther Leaf at Console At Paramount in Omaha

During the summer months, Omaha's Paramount has been a strictly picture theatre, its wonderful pipe organ in perfect silence. The console returns to use with the coming to Omaha of Esther Leaf, on September 10. Miss Leaf, who in private life is Mrs. Harry DuBoff, recently came back from the Paramount studios in New York. A year ago last January she returned to Omaha from Los Angeles, where she for some years played in Graumann's downtown theatre. Previously she had played in Omaha's Strand and Rialto theatres. She is a sister of Ann Leaf, who plays each evening over the Columbia chain from New York.

Would Ban Gang Films

An ordinance has been introduced in the city council of Salem, Ore., providing fines for the showing of gang pictures in that city.

STAGE SHOWS

Cincinnati Albee

Week ending September 11

There are four instead of the customary five acts on this week's bill, but the headliners, Olsen and Johnson, consume 45 minutes of the stage time, and the bill runs for the allotted period.

This week also serves to introduce Sam Freed, Jr., previously conductor of the New York Hippodrome orchestra, who takes charge of the Albee pit with an augmented orchestra. The revamped musical organization hereafter will feature overtures, and is using "Rhapsodie Classique" for the inaugural number.

Herbert Krall, feature organist at WKRC, local broadcasting station, starts as solo organist at this house.

Dorothea's Yellow Jackets in the hello spot start things off at a rapid pace with solo and ensemble tap and acrobatic dances. Although the hoofing does not throw the customers into a rave on account of novelty, it is nevertheless highly rhythmic, every movement being executed with skill, grace and precision.

Dick Nash and Midgie Fately, the former a six-footer or better, and the girl of very diminutive stature, occupy the deucer. After a series of single and duo songs and dances, Nash, who is an advocate of the Will Rogers style of stage entertainment, spins lariats and yarns simultaneously, and dances within the lariats. The act bowed off to a hefty hand.

Rita Burgess Gould, dramatic songstress, follows, assisted by an unprogrammed gent at the grand. Her act depicts the rise and fall of Rebecca Weinberg, done in four character bits. It clicked mightily with the customers, who brought Miss Gould back for several bows and an encore in which she disseminated some timely and pertinent advice on "quality thinking," stressing optimism and cheer in commercial and domestic routine.

Olsen and Johnson, screen stars, with a company of 15 stooges, simply panicked 'em with their clowning and gags, some of which are highly suggestive and risque, but those out front simply ate it up and called for more. The act uses considerable of the material presented last season, with much new added. Seven Negro dancers, ranging from mere babies to an old man with a peg leg, working to accompaniment of Olsen and Johnson on the piano and violin, were the applause hit of the act.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending September 3

Fanchon & Marco's "Circus Days" Idea works in nicely with the Wisconsin's Fall Kiddie Frolic in which 600 youngsters of Fanchon & Marco's free dancing school participate. The Idea opens with a circus setting, Lillian St. Leon & Company performing. Miss St. Leon is an equestrienne of no mean ability and the way she flits about atop her horse is nobody's business. Two male members of the company, garbed as clowns, flip-flop about with amazing agility.

Carl Sayton & Partner perform a number of startling gymnastic balancing stunts. Their offerings are unique and receive well earned plaudits.

The next episode presents a lesson in bareback riding as taught to novices. Three youngsters are brought upon the stage and Lillian St. Leon & Company put them through their paces which bring forth plenty of chuckles.

Hooper & Gatchett clown a bit and offer a Hawaiian vocal number after which both sing "Who" with diverse comedy embellishments.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Thinking back for the last few weeks and how I've been lazing around, reminds me of one fellow who went on his vacation and worked like——. His name is Kearney Walton Jr. . . . Yeah, I know, you probably know him and will undoubtedly think this is the bunk, . . . all you have to do though is take a look at him now, he sure looks great. . . . I had better start at the beginning. . . . Kearney (who is m.c. at the New Haven Paramount) and his Dad, Kearney Walton Sr. (who books singing talent with Paramount-Publix) were talking about the junior Walton's apparent obesity . . . and his Dad was laying it into him for letting himself get that way. . . . Well . . . Kearney junior merely said "O.K." and then went on his vacation and two weeks later came back with the physique of a gladiator, much to the surprise of everyone. . . . He wouldn't tell what he had done, so his Dad made inquiries and found, to his amazement that his youngster had hired out as a "mucker," (pick and shovel laborer) and had worked at this hard labor for all of his vacation. . . . Sure have to hand it to this young fellow. . . . That hard work not only did Kearney a lot of good, physically, but has caused the enmity of all the Yale boys because all the co-eds and the rest of the girls in New Haven have gone "wozzy" about him. . . .

Guy Lombardo, one of Music Corporation of America's ace orchestra leaders is going to play a "command performance." Lombardo and His Royal Canadians were asked by Governor Franklin Roosevelt of New York to play for a state function at the Pavillon Royal, on September 17. . . . It was a personal invitation from the Governor and as a result Lombardo's routing was changed so that he might play for Governor Roosevelt. . . . The following day, September 18, Lombardo and his musicians will furnish the music for the national convention of the American Bar Association at Atlantic City. . . .

Harry "Pop" Blair, manager of the organ and slide department of Shapiro, Bernstein and Company and president of the w.k. "Noon-day Club" (the many national members will be glad to learn) is now thirty (30) pounds lighter, due to a well-regulated diet.

The special service department of De-Sylva, Brown and Henderson's is again vacant, due to the departure by George Simon for his former job with Abe Oleman. . . . Molly Schrager and Al Saloman (Sullivan to me) are carrying on. . . . What I can't understand is, why the firm hasn't put Al in charge long ago, he knows everyone and I'm sure they all like him. . . . Not only that but the boy is a darned hard worker and deserves the position. . . .

Toodle-oo-oo.

ED. DAWSON.

Bee Starr performs suspended from a rope. She twists and turns in a manner which has the audience wondering how she does it. Her specialty is a one-armed somersault in mid-air which gets plenty of applause.

For the finale Adele Nelson trots out her three baby grand elephants who perform in a delightfully intelligent manner. They roll barrels, do waltzes, the hula-hula and other equally entertaining bits.

Omaha Orpheum

Week ending September 3

Eva Puck and Sam White, heralded as international favorites, together with Pepito, the famous Spanish clown, share headline honors at the Omaha Orpheum this week. Others on the bill are Furman, Sharkey and Lorraine and "Eight Feet of Rhythm" in the persons of Frank Starr, Castle Nick, Dot Probley and Helen Olcott.

As teacher and pupil of a dancing school, the Puck-White act gets under way well. White impersonates a scene at the ticket office of an old-time melodrama and later the two join in giving the play, about the down and out widow of a drunkard husband, with the suitor who would bring his own way to pass through the use of a rawhide. They call the number "The Girl Friend." To add to the mirth, the back walls of the tenement room seemingly accidentally fall down and expose Pepito rouging himself for a following act and other members of the evening's program. All dashed wildly out of sight. The house roared with laughter during the moment the backstage was exposed.

A novelty number in Pepito's act is one in which, as a French singer of opera, he leans to one side and another at impossible angles, his feet being held to the floor by hooks on his shoes, fastened to hooks on the floor, hardly visible to the audience generally, however. Another novelty is his wooden spoon Spanish xylophone number.

In a stage setting replete with the circus clowns' most extravagant dream, Pepito, assisted by Juanita and Bombo, entertains as prince of entertainers in his chosen field. His crying baby, egg juggling, cow-milking and other features take hold of the audience as he would have them. His girl assistant goes through various unusual body contortions.

"A Three-some on the Song Course," Furman, Sharkey and Lorraine open their act with "If We Had Re-Incarnation." They follow this with "The Men Are Going to Be the Weaker Sex Now." In trio, they conclude their act, well balanced and replete for their given time on the program, with a "Prosperity" song.

Two Omaha newsboys, winners of the Opportunity amateur night, staged for youngsters under 16 years of age at the last show each Thursday evening, give a skit, dancing and mouth harps. One lad is an agile dancer, wiry and capable of much hip effect. The other has a novelty in playing a small harp without the use of his hands. The two close with a mouth harp duet, playing "Stars and Stripes Forever." The Eight Feet of Rhythm act, as the name implies, is a dance act. Polo habits, black boots, white breeches, caps and all are there. Their tap dancing, individually and in unison wins them much applause.

RKO THEATRE

SLICES OF MELLIN

CHICAGO

AUDREE COLLINS, pianist in Harris' Chicago office is feeling like a "Million Dollar Baby From a Five and Ten Cent Store," for Audrey, who really worked behind the counter at Kresge's pounding the piano, collaborated with Charlie ("Smiling") Agnew in writing that "Slow But Sure," one which looks like one of the big hits of the year. No wonder Audrey feels tickled pink when she tickles the ivories demonstrating this number. . . . Wilson Doty, organist at WBBM just returned from a week's vacation.

Wayne King, the "Waltz King," and his orchestra are back at the Aragon ballroom. King is called "Mad Anthony," though he's never gone in for the mad, merry orchestrations of some of the other bands. Waltzes are his favorite forte, and his arrangements are always the essence of melodious simplicity. Hear a single phrase of his music and you recognize it instantly. It is as individual as the music of Guy Lombardo, Rudy Vallee, or Coon-Sanders. King is a first rate golfer, shooting in the middle 70's and spend much of his time nowadays at flying fields, having recently won his pilot's license.

Ted Weems, popular conductor of the Trianon Ballroom orchestra, is the direct descendant of Angus Weymes, credited with inventing the Scottish bagpipes, and though he was born in Pittsburgh he has developed a slick dance band—a versatile crew of performers with a heavy radio following. Ted Weems is an orchestra leader of accomplishments. He set up his jazz tent a couple of seasons ago at Lombardo's old stand and made good. The smash hit, "Somebody Stole My Gal," is credited by Music Corporation of America with giving Weems an opportunity to play at the inaugural ball of the President of the United States. Weems organized his band with his brother, Art, while attending the University of Pennsylvania. Their rhythmic dance music can be heard every evening over station WGN. . . .

Dom Miller, organist, is now playing at the Punch and Judy theatre, the millionaire club theatre, located at Grosse Pointe, the Gold Coast of Detroit, and would like to hear from his many friends. . . . Billee Kvale, blonde beauty now singing at the Vanity Fair, expects to start an engagement soon at one of the choice cafes of Milwaukee. . . . Al Mora of Mora & Goldman, clothiers to the theatrical trade, is a great golf fiend and would gladly give away a suit of clothes if he were lucky enough to make a hole-in-one. Al is a fine boy and I can recommend his clothes to anyone. . . .

Returning to the scenes of their first big success, Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians are scheduled to play a two-weeks' engagement at the Granada Cafe. Friendship between Guy and Al Quodback, proprietor of Chicago's popular night club, caused the famous MCA band leader to cancel other engagements so that he might spend two weeks at the Chicago cafe.

Lew White expressed his artistic temperament in other ways than merely through the medium of his great organ. The NBC organist has decorated his office in a veritable symphony of modernistic furnishings. . . . Rudy Vallee, orchestra leader and crooner, will continue under exclusive management of the National Broadcasting Company for an additional three-year period under the terms of a new contract.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNARD COWHAM (New York City Flushing RKO) presented another of his novelty organ programs, which he built up with special lyrics and photos of his vacation trip, interpolating them between songs. He first played the signature song of RKO and then flashed a special lyriced version of "I Wanta Sing About You," on the screen for his opening song for the audience to sing to. From then on, the audience grew more and more hysterical as Bernie told them of his trip and showed them old-time photos which were supposed to represent his relatives. The songs Bernie offered the audience to sing were: "Nevertheless," "Waltz You Saved For Me," "Through With Love" and the old time favorite, "There Are Smiles." The audience here are certainly glad to see Bernie back on the job and their applause before and after the solo proved it.

FRANKLIN BENTEL (Beaver Falls Rialto) introduced another of his novelty organ presentations called "Melody Scrapbook," for this week's solo and did very well with it. Before the audience sang all of the melodies from Bentel's scrapbook, he introduced the solo with a cleverly written special version to "Among My Souvenirs," and then orally introduced each song before playing it. The program consisted of "Tears," "Little Old Church In the Valley," "I Have a Sweetheart," "Heartaches," and "Loves Old Sweet Song." The novelty was put together very well and judging from the applause the audience enjoyed it too.

RUSS HENDERSON (Worcester Plymouth). The "Radio Popularity Contest," which this organist presented here last week, proved so successful that the management had him use it a second week. Solo opened with oral conversation by Henderson, to the effect that the audience had their favorite radio stars and just to see who was the most popular he would present their individual pictures and have the audience sing the songs associated with them. Applause and singing would determine the winner. Colored photos of a number of radio stars including Valee, Downey and Kate Smith were used before each song was sung by the audience. The songs were: "For You," "You're In My Arms," "Happy Returns of the Day," and "Million Dollar Baby."

The applause on each was great and apparently Henderson considered it a tie, because he flashed a slide on the screen bearing the words, "The contest is closed so I'll call the darn thing tied." Applause for him was so good that he played "Hikin' Down the Highway," for an encore.

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) offered a novelty, "Sunburnt and Broke," with colored cartoon slide he hove into sight at the console in the spot while playing an introductory number with the orchestra. Then came words about Barney liking the sea and having a boardwalk romance and getting friendly with a girl while Hornig played "Walking My Baby Back Home." This was followed by "Have You Forgotten the Night." A parody on "My Bonny Lies Over the Sea," was then played and then words were flashed while he offered more fun with burlesque on "One More Time" entitled "One More Dime," which he followed up with "Walking My Baby" again with words about Barney not being able to forget when she rolls her eyes. For the finale, the orchestra, directed by George Wild, joined in on the song "Maybe I'm Right," with audience coming in strong for singing words. Big applause at end.

STUART BARRIE (Chicago Chicago) offered "Legend of the Bells." Using chimes and illustrated slides on the front drop of the stage he described the burning of Moscow. Much credit must be given him for the unique arrangement and greater credit must be given to the originator of the mechanical effects. At the beginning, a picture of several Moscow cathedrals was flashed upon the screen and as the story progressed other slides were superimposed upon the first one telling the story and at the same time one could see the flames of fire slowly gaining headway. Finally the flames destroy the cathedrals until only the smoldering remains can be seen.

The number ends rather abruptly and it is not until after Barrie has taken a bow that the audience realizes it is time for a hand. By the time the applause is finished another feature of the show is in progress and it is too late to call him back.

PAUL TOMPKINS (Baltimore Century) was the guest organist in place of Al Hornig. Coming into view as the console rose in a spot, he opened his novelty, "The Hey! Ride," with "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," using appropriate wording on screen. This was followed by words about "Let's Go on a Hey! Ride," played to an old tune, and then he swung into "Hi, Ho, the Merio," with words about Bill getting a good idea, and comedy about a farmer and his still, with another tune, "The Old Grey Mare." Then came "When She's Out Walking She's a Gorgeous Thing," with "Whistling in the Dark" flashed with bars of music and played. Some more words about necking to "Hi, Ho, the Merio," and then into "Dream a Little Dream of Me," with audience warming up and singing and also joining in with "Wabash Moon." Then for the finale words flashed announced "Our Hey Ride Is a Pleasure That's Ending All Too Soon," and more on "Wabash Moon."

JOE STOVES (Jamaica, Long Island Valencia) did very well with his novelty organ presentation entitled, "Radio Popularity Contest." The solo was composed of songs made famous by a number of popular radio favorites, whose photos flashed on the screen before the playing of their particular number. Each of the numbers was enjoyed and sung as loudly as possible by the fans of each radio luminary. Numbers played by Stoves and sung by the audience were, "For You," "I'm in Your Arms," "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," "Million Dollar Baby" and a final chorus of "Let's Get Friendly." Stoves is gaining a lot of popularity at this house, with his clever novelties and fine organ playing.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio, Texas) offered a thirty-minute organ solo over KABC, newly opened radio station in the Texas building. It was a good boost for the Publix theatre. Earl Abel played the following selections: "Now You're In My Arms," "By My Side," "Come On and Let's Get Friendly," "Dream a Little Dream of Me," "When I Take My Sugar to Tea," "For You," "You're the One I Care For," "I Want to Sing About You," "Out of Nowheres," "It's the Girl," "Loveless Love," "All Dressed Up With a Broken Heart," "Can't You Read Between the Lines," and "Just One More Time." This master organist has also been heard over stations KTSA, KONO, and KTAP from time to time. At the end of the broadcast many of the Texas theatre patrons phoned in and asked for a great many request numbers.

ARMAND CARLOS (Denver Paramount) guest organist for a week thrilled the patrons when he put the organ back into use after standing idle for several weeks. His offerings were a ballad, fox trot and waltz—"Falling in Love Again," "Moonlight Saving Time," and "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," respectively. For the first offering the words followed the music on the screen and for all three appropriate backgrounds added to the enjoyment. The pictures used for the last were taken at Seven Falls, near Colorado Springs and showed exceptionally fine photography.

LOU BONDER (New York Park Plaza) offered one of his most interesting organ novelties recently in which Mr. Benjamin, the manager of the house did much in putting the stunt over. The presentation was entitled "Around the Dial," and was a burlesque on radio reception. Solo opened as spotlight picked out Bonder seated at the console, twirling the dials on a radio placed on the console, with voice coming out, apparently, of the pictured loud speaker on the screen. The announcing of the different programs, singing, talking, etc., were accomplished with the use of phonograph records and Mr. Benjamin's voice. The songs sung by the audience were, "Just One More Chance," a special to the tune, "Don't Tell Her," "Happy Returns of the Day," a tongue-twister starting with, "Sick Slim," etc., and a final chorus of "On the Beach With You." Each of the songs is cleverly introduced and announced by Mr. Benjamin and enhanced the program to the extent of earning an encore for Bonder.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee Wisconsin) again offers "Your Part of the Program," assisted by Orville Rennie, tenor. His selections include "I Found a Million Dollar Baby," "It's the Girl" and "Nevertheless," the latter two being sung through by Rennie along with the audience.

CON MAFFIE (New York Paradise) introduced the "Lung Tester," a novelty organ presentation in which the audience are invited to test and expand their lungs, by singing each song as the organist plays it. All introductions to songs and incidental explanations are made through a "mike" by Maffie. Opening with "Dream a Dream," the program continues with special lyrics to the tune, "Exactly Like You," which is played and sung as a challenge between the ladies and gentlemen in the audience, "Million Dollar Baby," and a closing chorus of "I'm Through With Love." Just before the last number, Maffie introduces Bon Walker, who is supposed to represent a local newsboy. Bon gets a great hand for his fine singing of "Rocky Mountain Lullaby." He interpolates a well-known yodel chorus and earns himself an encore, in which he leads the audience in the singing of the closing number.

The audience who patronize this house apparently like Maffie very much, always giving him a fine reception.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

We sometimes wonder if there isn't a lot of bologna about this "depression" stuff. Dad wears patches on the seat of his pants because of this depression. Ma says she can't buy Willie a new pair of pants because of the hard times. Sister is sore because Ma bought her lisle stockings instead of silk, but you never find the gas tank empty.

Pa and Ma and sister and Willie will all get into the flivver and drive twenty miles to see 'em "Ride 'er Cowboy" and when they get home Pa will go down town and talk "depression" as long as he can get anyone to listen to him. The merchants will close their places of business so that everybody can go and see the races. Thirty thousand yaps will pay five dollars per to see a couple of pugs maul each other for thirty minutes and then stand off the grocer because of this terrible depression.

We quote an editorial in the Omaha World-Herald which covers this subject of depression about the best of anything we have seen. It reads in part:

"Yes, times are hard. The depression is the worst in the history of the country. It is almost impossible to borrow money, and collections are very slow. You hear these things every day from all sides, but somehow or other what one sees rather belies what one hears. Now, for instance, right here in Nebraska within the last thirty or forty days nearly twenty thousand people paid admissions to see a rodeo at North Platte, another fifty or sixty thousand paid admission to see the rodeo at Burwell, another fifty thousand paid admissions to see the Broken Bow rodeo-fair, thirty thousand paid admissions to see the Trenton powwow, the Adams county fair drew thirty thousand paid admissions and goodness only knows how many thousands of dollars were spent for oil and gasoline by those who paid these admissions.

"Nor can anyone hazard more than a guess how many hundreds of thousands of dollars all these folks paid out for hot dogs, hamburgers, corn games, chuck-a-luck, riding devices, side shows and whatnot.

"We may stint on food, wear dilapidated shoes, last year's straw hat, visit the barber less often, let the house and outbuildings go unpainted and postpone shingling the roof, all because times are so darned hard and money so scarce, but we'll be golswiggled if we just don't have to see the rodeo and go places in the auto, and spend six or 'leven dollars to win a dollar-and-a-half cotton blanket, and cough up dimes and quarters to see the fattest girl and the largest snake in captivity and the hula-hula girls straight from Harlem, or put a coin on a number and tremble with expectancy while the wheel goes around."

That editorial not only sums up human nature to a gnat's eye, but it proves beyond doubt that people will buy entertainment if they are offered what they want, depression or no depression.

Producers claim that the reason the show business is so bad is because the showmen don't get out and sell their product to the public.

That's a fine alibi for them to put up for their own delinquencies, when the facts are that, outside of four or five meritorious productions, they haven't had a thing to sell for the past year, notadamthing.

It's no proof that a merchant is a poor merchant because he can't sell a basket of rotten apples with four or five sound ones on top, and that is what producers expect theatremen to do.

Within the past six weeks, when our lumbago and hay fever would permit, we have seen quite a number of pictures, and outside of two, there wasn't a picture that was worth spending one's time to see, and these two drew better business on the second night showing, while the others flopped on the second night, which is further proof that the public is particular about its entertainment. Give the public what it wants to see and there will be no such thing as depression at the box offices, and no sort of hocus pocus advertising is going to do the business. It takes PICTURES, for the public have chased rainbows as long as they are going to.

The producers will give a director an insipid, disjointed semblance of a story and expect him and the stars to make entertainment out of it.

It is really pitiful to see stars of ability struggling through seven or eight reels of film trying to make something that will pass as entertainment. There has never been a time when story material has been as weak and meaningless as it has been within the past year. There are too many sheep-herders writing stories for the screen, that's what makes mutton so high. This doesn't apply to all of them, but it does apply to altogether too many. The time has passed when a picture was a picture; today it must be ENTERTAINMENT.

This will probably not please certain elements in the business, but it is not written for that purpose, in fact, it is not written to please anybody, but we have felt that somebody ought to tell the TRUTH about it, and that's what we are trying to do.

Our experience with thousands of exhibitors all over the country warrants us in saying that when they have a picture with merit, and one that appeals to the sensibilities of the people, there is no complaint of a lack of patronage. This being true, it is going to be rather difficult for the producers to fasten the blame for this box office depression on the shoulders of the exhibitors, for they can show only what is furnished them, and the Lord knows they have been getting the worst of it lately. Maybe it's our lumbago and hay fever that makes us feel that way, but if it takes lumbago and hay fever to bring the truth out of a man, then there are a lot of people in the business who ought to have lumbago and hay fever, and we hope they get both of 'em.

Ask Theatres to Support Relief of the Unemployed

Creation of funds with which to relieve San Francisco unemployed, is sought in the appointment of a committee of city officials and civic leaders who, seeking $1,500,000, have designated the theatres and railroads as the source of the prescribed revenue.

George W. Gerhard of the Civic League of Improvement Clubs offers a plan to levy a tax of one-tenth of one per cent on the sales of railroad and theatre tickets. Amusement interests have announced their protests, pointing to theatres operating at a loss, and other indications that motion picture theatres are not capable of supporting the relief believed necessary as a result of the depression.

It is feared that an amusement tax adopted in San Francisco might be included as a state-wide measure. Governor Rolph has already announced that a special session of the state legislature will be called to discuss unemployment relief.

Course on Films Added By New School of Research

Lectures on the motion picture have been added to the studies offered by the New School of Social Research in New York, and beginning with the fall term, a course embracing cinematic history, technique and achievement will be conducted by Hugh Miller.

Miller has been affiliated with motion picture activities in both England and the United States, part of the time as an actor. He has also been on the stage. In 1925 he founded, with Ivor Montagu, the Film Society of London, an organization presenting motion pictures to subscription audiences.

CHICAGO

From booker to branch manager, with his 30th birthday yet to be celebrated, is the record of Earl Silverman, who this week assumed charge of the Warner branch in Chicago. Silverman succeeds Joe Vergesslich, who has been recalled to New York to take over the post of Metropolitan division manager, comprising the New York, New Jersey and Brooklyn territory. Silverman started in the motion picture business in 1921 as a booker with Associated Producers, later joining First National. He joined Warner Brothers six years ago and since that time has earned an enviable reputation as city salesman. In assuming his new duties Silverman will have associated with him as assistants Tom Gilliam in charge of country sales and Percy Barr in charge of city sales. His many friends along the Row are giving Silverman the glad hand.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 94.—(A) Name as many as you can of the various possible causes of fires in motion picture projection. (B) What may cause film to stop, pile up and get into the light beam? Name contributing possible causes for this sort of happening. (C) Tell us what damages are done by a too-heavy aperture tension and how you would make test to ascertain whether or not the tension is too heavy. Have YOU ever made such a test? (D) Name various causes for film buckling.

Answer to Question No. 93

Answer to question No. 93—The question was: (A) Just what attention should the sound gate aperture have and how often? (B) In event you have begun projection without having closed the sound gate, what would you do? (C) Just what attention should be given the pick-up optical system each day?

Last week six correct answers to question No. 92 came too late to be given credit, namely: Lester Borst, Harlan B. Fox, VanBuskirk and Edgar Kroll, Edward Daniels, Bert Adams and Henry Edgar. Try to get your answers in as soon as you can after the question is received. It is a tremendous task to examine the answers in any event and of course delayed replies add to the difficulty. I am not complaining; just asking you to help all you can. Well, up to a thousand answers a week spells very real work under the best circumstances.

Up to this writing the following correct answers have been received to question No. 93: Herman Billings, Harlan B. Fox, George Anderson, G. E. Doe, Stanley Dickson, Leroy Macklin, Arthur Quick, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Herman Billings, Phil Granning, Bill Doe, Dan Harrison, Andy Drew, Phillip Matteson, F. H. Bates, George Richards, W. D. Peck, Lemuel K. Rosen, Bob Danning, Robert Peterson, George Jacobs, Robert Dodson, Hiram Mitchel, H. D. Schofield, James McGuire, John Andrews, Another Doe, David Moses, S. Evans, Tom Avery, Richard Singleton, L. D. Daniels, L. M. Corning, Abe Sewards, D. Fausett, Wm. D. Hotaling, Evers Stanton, Henry Edwards, Frank Oleson, Alex Lodi, Tom Turk, Dan L. Graves, Frank Samuels, Jack Billings, Alex P. Jones, G. L. Grimes, Gregory Day, P. H. Douglas, Walter Sever, Walter Karlton, James Devoy, Mike Evans, Tom Mason, John T. Marsh, T. G. Irwin and Phillip Miller.

Hiram Mitchel, G. E. Doe, Bill Doe, James McGuire and Frank Oleson gave exceptionally good replies. Friend McGuire says: "(A) See that both aperture and gate and all parts thereof are perfectly clean. This includes the sound sprocket and path of the film through the sound gate. (B) If I found I had made such an unpardonable blunder I would set the fader at zero, close the sound gate and advance the fader as fast as consistent with good results. Then I would call myself hard names for having done such an entirely inexcusable thing. Have been handling sound equipment every day for two years and can honestly say I've pulled no such boner yet. Hope I never will! (My compliments. I hope so too. You won't, either, so long as your mind is continuously on your work while on duty.—Editor.) (C) Every day I remove the exciting lamp from its holder, examining it for filament sag and clean its outer surface. I also test the light at the sound aperture to make sure everything is O. K. I polish the outer lens surfaces of the system every third day, finding that to be quite sufficient, though it might be necessary more often in some locations. Here the air is very clean; also I use every effort to keep dust out of my projection room."

Warning: I have rejected many answers otherwise correct for the reason that wrong nomenclature is employed. When you refer to a projector, don't say "machine." That is incorrect; also there are several varieties of machine in the modern projection room. The recommended nomenclature of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is standard in this department. A projection room is a projection room, not a "booth." An intermittent sprocket is a "pull-down" sprocket, true enough, but we don't call it that. Use correct nomenclature if you expect to have your answers get by.

REAL COOPERATION

We are in receipt of a letter from Mr. W. H. Hirschfeld of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, makers of the Motiograph Projector, which is along the lines of true cooperation with the work of this department.

Mr. Hirschfeld says: "Dear Mr. Richardson: We have noticed several articles in your department dealing with the arc control trouble on Motiograph Deluxe Reflector Art Lamps. Particularly we refer to one from Gray Phillips, Crescent theatre, Grand Haven, Michigan, which appears in the June 27th issue. Some while back there was another from J. H. Johnson, chief projectionist Temple theatre, Wellsville, New York, who spoke of a filter being manufactured by a Chicago concern which corrects this trouble. We have since had an interesting discussion with Mr. Johnson and it seems that he now rather agrees that we are right.

"In view of the fact that this trouble is not one peculiar alone to the Motiograph Deluxe Reflector Arc Lamps, but may be experienced by any make of arc controls, we feel that a point of information would not be out of order.

"This trouble was never experienced in the days before the advent of sound. We note that you don't ask Mr. Gray Phillips whether or not he is using arc lamps or controls in connection with sound equipment, and therein perhaps lies the whole reason for his difficulty, as we discovered after long and very careful investigation.

"To explain the situation, Mr. Richardson, when automatically fed arc lamps were used before the days of sound the spark discharge across the relay points of the control was very weak. The spark had such low intensity that it did not pit the contact points, or cause any other trouble. As a matter of fact, we have had arc controls operate for a period of two or three years without even renewing the points. Since the inception of sound, however, in a number of instances it was found that this spark discharge, weak as it was across the arc control relay points, would be picked up by the amplification system and emerge through the horns or loudspeakers very audibly, sounding almost exactly like static on a radio.

"A number of projectionists discovered that this noise could be eliminated by the shunting of one or two M.F.D. condensers across the arc relay points.

"Fine! This did eliminate the noise in horns or speakers, but what it did to the arc control in a short while was just too bad, and I don't mind telling you it took us a long time to find out what the trouble was.

"It seems that putting the condenser across the relay points changed the nature of the harmless little spark so that, through the action of the condenser it became a very hot spark which, for want of a better description, might be called a high frequency spark. We discovered that the spark was so hot that it would oxidize the metal or the contact points, said oxidation sometimes forming an insulation between the contact points would of course put the arc control out of business.

"In other instances the intensly hot spark would raise a small projection of metal from one of the contact points, which seemingly would weld itself to the opposite contact point, causing the two points to stick together. This, of course, would cause the arc control to feed until the carbons came into contact with each other, whereupon the projectionist would, very naturally, attempt to manipulate the adjustment screw, which would spread the points, and after readjustment the control might again, for a short while, function all right. This oxidization of the points and welding characteristic would cause all sorts of freak operation by the arc control. Usually the projectionist would clean the points with emery paper and the control would again work for a while, or until this condition would again be set up, whereupon the control would again be erratic in operation.

"The cure, Mr. Richardson, we found to be something more than simply putting a condensor across the contact points. We had in fact to work out a regular filter system, which included other elements beside the condensers. This system works out very satisfactorily. It operates to leak off the spark discharge across the relay points, and thus to reduce the spark from high frequency characteristics back to its harmless normal nature again. With this system in operation there is no corroding or oxidization of the points. The arc controls as sensitively and as perfectly as it did in the old days before sound. The filtering system is known as RA737C. Its cost is only $15 for two lamps, including full installation instructions and blue prints."

This letter is the right sort. In it the manufacturer not only tells the projectionist what the real trouble is, but he explains it in detail so the man may know exactly what he is doing. We commend the equipment spoken of. It is put out by a reliable manufacturer, hence may be depended upon. We commend it to the serious consideration of projectionists who have trouble with their relay contact points.

Reflector Arc for Portable

The portable projector manufactured by Phototone may now be had with a reflector type arc, instead of the 1,000 watt Mazda heretofore supplied. This arc of course provides a very much more powerful light source than was supplied by the Mazda, hence it will enable the projector to cover a wider range of work. Phototone will market this as the first instance of a reflector type arc light source being used on a portable projector.

The arc lamp equipment is very similar to those now in use on regular professional projectors, except that its size is in proportion to the size of the portable projector. The reflector type arc is not supplied as regular equipment, but may be obtained as an accessory, at an increased price. A current rectifier is supplied with the equipment, so that direct current will be available at the arc.

Equipment Payment Per Cent of Gross, ERPI English Plan

Inauguration of a new sales policy in the British Isles, by which sound equipment installations may be paid for on the basis of a small percentage of the theatres' weekly receipts, is announced by Erpi. The sales plan opens the way to sound installations for large numbers of small British theatres which would otherwise have found the purchase of sound equipment impossible. Service charges will also be paid for on the same basis of a percentage of the gross receipts.

P. L. Palmerton, Erpi foreign sales manager, stated that the new purchase plan would be available only to theatres of good credit ratings and that the percentage payment would not be fixed but would be determined by individual theatre situations.

Only Ghost Missing In Film Exhibit at Atlantic City Pier

The ghost from "The Ghost Walks" is not in the Hollywood Motion Picture Exhibit on the Steel Pier, Atlantic City, and that's news, because just about everything else is there. From the perfume of the stars, "blended to express their individual personalities," to Chester Conklin's mustache —247½ whiskers, count 'em, 247¾—the countless factors that go into the physical making of a motion picture are presented for the delectation of the Boardwalkers. And there are wax figures of the reigning beauties of stardom to make the wild waves a bit wilder.

The third annual exposition of what's what and who's who in the studios, past and present, is now at its peak, occupying an auditorium on the Steel Pier of the pleasure and health resort. With Ed F. Corcoran as director and G. Burling Jarrett, manager, the exhibit has the cooperation of the following companies: Educational, Tiffany, Columbia, Warner-First National, Eastman Kodak, D. W. Griffith, M-G-M, Paramount Publix, RKO, United Artists, Harold Lloyd, Christie, and Hal Roach.

Standing in one corner of the auditorium, one has before him a vista of exhibits. In the booth on the left is the clothing of each of the youngsters in Our Gang, together with one of their trick autos. In another booth are original and authentic properties, costumes and so on, from new pictures. There is a group of Christmas cards used by stars, as well as their personal stationery. A showcase contains a layout of grease paint, powder and rouge.

Down another wall is a booth of many curiosities, including two of Mary Pickford's curls which she parted with in Chicago before making "Coquette." There is a life-size bust of Paul Whiteman sculptured from a 200-pound cake of soap. There is a costume worn by Ramon Novarro in "Son of India," a sombrero worn by Ken Maynard, a ukulele autographed by Cliff Edwards, and wax figures of a number of stars.

Finally, there's a booth dedicated to those who have passed on and out of the studio—though not out of the picture of memory. A copy of Rudolph Valentino's last will and testament, a goldheaded cane that had been presented to Wallace Reid, makeup box of Lon Chaney, a photograph of Milton Sills. An appropriate setting for the star of "The Barker."

Williams Buys "Ten Nights"

K. Lee Williams, road showman of Oklahoma City, has taken over distributing for L. E. Goetz, of Chicago, for "Ten Nights in a Barroom" for Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah and Wyoming. The picture will be road showed on special ballyhoo calliope trucks, with tieups, advance screenings and a bill posting car 7 days in advance. L. C. McHenry will be associated with Williams.

May Switch Agencies

Switching of United Artists distribution agencies abroad is indicated in the trip of Joseph M. Schenck, president of the company, to Europe to join Arthur W. Kelly, vice-president and treasurer, for a survey of conditions abroad.

$2 WORDS for a $2 PICTURE!

In all your life did you ever read better reviews than these?

Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne score screen triumph. Here's the perfect picture! What a film it is! What a triumph for Metro! If you don't see another picture—ever—you must see "The Guardsman". REGINA CREWE—American

★★★★ "GUARDSMAN" sparkles four stars. A new triumph of the young cinema season. A foreseen success. Earns its four stars by magnificence of portrayal combined with subtletly and wit of the story which is Ferenc Molnar's. How could it be anything but perfect entertainment? Lunt and La Fontanne, superb artists, take splendidly to the camera. He is handsome; she beautiful; both are fascinating and glamorous. "The Guardsman" is an enchanting evening of fun. We think you'll love it. IRENE THIRER—Daily News

It is a wonderful relief to sit through such a production. Through the discerning eye of the camera one has the opportunity of enjoying this Molnar work to its fullest extent. The audience applauded as though Mr. Lunt were present in person. Dozens of subtle, witty scenes in this film. MORDAUNT HALL—Times

First Family of the Stage becomes practically the First Family of the Screen by the gayety, deftness and light hilarity of their incomparable portrayals. The Lunts are magnificent. Admirable entertainment. RICHARD WATTS, JR.—Herald-Tribune

Its picturization has given the current film year a notable film addition. One of the most charming and satisfying of the 1931 movies. JULIA SHAWELL—Graphic

Superb entertainment. Brilliantly acted, sophisticated in theme and sparkling in dialogue. The result is one of the outstanding productions of the year. ROSE PELSWICK—Eve. Journal

Masterly work. Delightful, suave, mature, literate and humorous piece, of which not only Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but the two principals, may well be proud. Altogether "The Guardsman" is an excellent picture. WILLIAM BOEHNEL—World-Telegram

A wholly delightful talkie comedy. Gratifyingly close to perfection. The Astor, evidently, has a new long-lease tenant. MARTIN DICKSTEIN—Bklyn. Eagle

CLIMAXING A YEAR OF ASTOR $2 HITS!

Lunt and Fontanne have taken their Theatre Guild success "The Guardsman" and made of it a screen success of very much the same caliber. It is delightful entertainment all the way through and ought to keep the ushers at the Astor busy for a long time. THORNTON DELEHANTY—Eve. Post

A coup for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Nothing quite like it has been attempted in the talkies. Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne as brilliant as ever. The talkies are lucky to have them. I wouldn't overlook "The Guardsman" if I were you. JOHN S. COHEN, JR —Sun

Dear Mr. Rogers:

The concensus of opinion of my staff after the successful eight-months run of "New Yorkers" at the Broadway Theatre has determined a popular priced policy for this house.

I have evolved a new form of entertainment to be known as B. S. Moss VARIETIES which will combine the best elements of all theatrical fields and film productions.

In furtherance of our plans, I was pleased to conclude a contract for first-run Tiffany Pictures which I feel certain will and must measure up to the high level we have set for ourselves.

Mr. Budd Rogers,
General Sales Manager,
Sono Art-World Wide Pictures Inc.,

Dear Mr. Rogers:

It is with pleasure I acknowledge receipt of an approved contract for your product for the Tiffany 1931-32 season.

Having operated the Garden in Milwaukee for four years as well as theatres throughout the state of Wisconsin, I have learned the entertainment tastes of the people of this particular section.

Study of the work sheet issuedrby your companies and confidence in the men now associated with you, makes it possible for me to say I believe the entire line-up of Sono Art, Tiffany, Cruze and Sennett special meets with the requirements of the people of Milwaukee and Wisconsin and fits in well with the other product I have secured for the Garden, long acknowledged Milwaukee's premiere downtown, first-run theatre.

Naturally you will understand, I purchase pictures to make money. I believe I can and will gain a substantial bank balance through showing of your pictures. The Morgan and Mack special, directed by Sennett, I believe, will be a real harvest bringer. Too, "Race Track", "The Last Mile" "Left Over Ladies", "Hotel Continental", "X Marks the Spot", and others should reap profits for us for they are great stories and with proper casts should make great pictures.

Personally I am sure this is going to be a good year for both of us.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen:

Am indeed gratified that we have consummated a deal to exhibit Tiffany Pictures for the coming season at the Woods Theatre, Chicago.

I have screened the first few of your new releases and if the quality of these pictures can be taken as a criterion as to what the rest of your program will be, am sure that Tiffany will rate very high as a producing company this year.

The list of productions which your company is releasing together with the casts of stellar players which have been announced, I feel sure guarantees me box office successes of the highest order.

You may rest assured that we will make every effort to properly exploit and present all Tiffany Pictures that play the Woods Theatre as we expect to be most proud of them.

My dear Buddy:-

I have made a very careful analysis of your product for the coming season. I have looked into your production plans, the list of your stories and the players under contract with you, and I am more than pleased to have been able to conclude a contract with you for your entire product for the New Lafayette Theatre. I feel that this is Tiffany's year, and that you will come through with some big box office attractions.

I just screened "Women Go on Forever", and I want to compliment you on this picture. This picture is box-office all over and I am sure when we play it we will both show a handsome profit from its exhibition.

I am anxiously waiting to screen "Murder at Midnight", as I feel that this picture with this title will be a big attraction.

Sentimental America

A CONTRIBUTION to the answer to the motion picture makers' perpetual question "What do they Want?" is available in the results of an expensive and extensive radio program survey just completed by Montgomery Ward & Company, Chicago mail order house.

As a radio advertiser it became important to this concern to discover what the American housewife in some nine million homes wanted to hear on the air and when she wanted to hear it. The answer in summary is: "sentimental stuff" and at 8:30 o'clock in the morning.

This inquiry is probably the most exhaustive and the most carefully safeguarded survey of public taste that has been made in the terms of the great mass audience, the audience that the motion picture serves. Montgomery Ward sent out a four-page folder, outlining a sequence of varied radio test programs, mailing it to nine million families. Ten thousand dollars in prizes, ranging from $1,000 to $10, were offered for responses to the questionnaire. Each program of the test broadcasts contained a key word to give assurance that the program was really heard by the contestant. The range of material offered in the four tests, each running a week, was from sprightly music, through typical air dialogue and drama and minstrelsy to the sheer sentiment of a program of "Beautiful Thoughts." After the elimination of faulty responses to the elaborate questionnaire, some seventy thousand were accepted as eligible, and in this seventy thousand a tremendous majority voted for a permanent program of "Beautiful Thoughts."

So now Montgomery Ward is on the air to its millions with old songs and hymns, bits of poetry of the Eddie Guest school, and even interludes of mellow, time-ripened prose of the calibre of Senator Vest's appreciation of the dog from McGuffey's Fifth Reader.

It is submitted that seventy thousand house wives of America cannot be wrong—at least about what they want on the air. And, remember, the motion picture is the prayer-wheel of the Wish.

Bang Goes Another Million!

WITH a considerable flambuoyance of type, United Artists advertises "Palmy Days" in a reversion to the old dollar publicity technique with the line "Looks like a Million—costs what it looks like." Far too often we have to observe that cost is not an index of value in the world of the motion picture, that dollar strutting annoys the customers, and that the exhibitor does not care what it costs, but is most eager to know what it is worth.

Save the Wild Flowers

FOR many years the Pennsylvania censors held the world championship for general assininity, but today the title goes to the New York Board of Motion Picture Censors, which has handed down a ruling barring from the screen:

> " . . . any scene showing an infant at the breast of its mother, where the mother is civilized."

This to be sure leaves to the art of the motion picture a number of excellent races, the yellow, the black and the brown, for the purposes of portraying maternal care, if the types chosen are sufficiently primitive. Presumably an educated Tahitian mother would be barred while her wilder and more nubile sister from Morea would be eligible. If this keeps up, the stars of the Milky Way will be ruled out of popular astronomy.

"Excuse for Love?"

A RESUME of "The Hundred Best Pictures of Eight Months," compiled in the offices of Mrs. T. G. Winter, in public relations work for the Hays office in Hollywood contains a review of "An American Tragedy" with which we can disagree with a mean grin. It says, among other things: "In picture form the story has lost much of its slime and overdone sexuality, as well as part of its 'punch.' . . . Holmes is not a convincing excuse for the love of women and the excitement that is supposed to center around him." Now, Mrs. Winter, really! Just suppose Mr. Holmes was really caloric. Then what?

"In Conference"

MR. EDGAR PAUL HERMANN, advertising manager of the Lincoln National Life Insurance Company, has taken his pen in hand to record in two and a half pages of "Printers' Ink" fifteen reasons why sales conferences are no good. His analysis is charming but one reason is enough—they do not get anywhere. The other day Mr. Ralph Kettering of General Motors remarked that the way to kill anything was to refer it to a committee. Conferences and committees are valuable only for the purpose of having the "buck" passed to them. A careful consideration of the big moments in the development of the motion picture finds each of them marked by a husky one-man decision. Committees and conferences play safe. Aggression and daring belong to individuals.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

Writing in MOTION PICTURE MONTHLY, an organ of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Alice Ames Winter surveys the indications to be had in a review contest in which eleven hundred Pasadena school children of the ninth to twelfth grades participated. Mrs. Winter observes:

The thing to remember is that no pressure was brought to bear on the pupils as to what pictures they should write about—or in fact as to whether they should choose to criticize a picture at all. They lived in a town where the nine theatres show practically all the major output. They are adolescents, concerning whom most producers have definite preconceptions in the problem of subject-matter interest. Yet the number of sex pictures they chose to discuss was negligible. So also was the number of gang pictures. The most astonishing thing is the picture that led all others in the number who selected it for review. One may have theories to explain it—afterward. But I am willing to wager that no one could have predicted it—for it was "Dracula," with 106 criticisms. Close on its heels came "Skippy" with 98, and then "Cimarron" with 89. Up high in the number were "The Big Trail," "Father's Son," "Just Imagine" and "Lightnin'."

The interest shown in "Dracula" and "Just Imagine" is an answer to the people who think the youth of today has passed into an unimaginative and purely materialistic attitude of mind. And the selection is perhaps a reply to others who have set youth down on a sordid scale.

MUSICAL & THEATRICAL NEWS of SAN FRANCISCO, the official organ of Musicians Union, Local No. 6, presents an article by Frederick Burr Scholl, which deals rather more calmly with the sound picture than is the wont of musicians. He observes:

Entertainment in the motion picture theatre today is in a transitory state. It has been this way before, but is aggravated at the present time by the great slump in business. Many claim that the talkies cannot stand on their own legs. There is, no doubt, a grain of truth in that statement, but that is not the whole truth.

Years ago, you often heard this phrase that "motion pictures were in their infancy"; in fact, you heard this almost up to the advent of the talkies. Judging by the standard of the recent picture plays, one could almost say that the pictures were now in their second childhood. It is to be noticed, however, that a good talkie is a money maker, and that in spite of the depression people somehow find the necessary money to attend. Needless to say, the talkie product will be vastly improved.

What is worrying the managers nowadays is to find out just what the public wants, and what is the best method of balancing up the show, and doctoring up business in general.

There is now a definite trend toward putting human music back in the picture shows. If the public had more money to spend the human element would be a big factor in filling up the gaps which now exist on the program.

In THE NEWS of CLEVELAND, Ed Jacobs writes these pointed words about times and manners and morals:

". . . Two weeks ago a mother asked her companion if it would be proper for her to talk over the affairs of life with her 17-year-old daughter. The reply was 'go ahead, you'll probably learn plenty.'

"Merely a bit of persiflage but truthful enough at that. Also it is indicative of the more modern trend that leans more toward frankness than in that epoch when the censors' standards for film appraisal were formulated. . . . Now that our films represent about an hour and a half of continuous dialogue it would be foolish to assume that there would be no cunning little innuendo or bit of business in evidence, at least in the same degree as obtains in the average drawing-room. . . ."

McCALL'S MAGAZINE, in its monthly presentation of motion picture observations by the distinguished Mr. Robert M. Sherwood, carries, in the forthcoming issue, some warnings to the "movie struck" youth of the nation, thus:

It is generally believed among film fans that most of the biggest stars began their screen careers as humble extras, moving about in the backgrounds of mob scenes until they caught the eye of perceptive directors. Our national passion for success stories, as exemplified in the Horatio Alger school of fiction, has led us to assume that any obscure clerk or salesgirl who can get work on a movie set is certain to develop rapidly into another Valentino or Garbo.

The bitter facts, however, prove otherwise. There are now some 18,000 registered extras in Hollywood, and no one knows how many more who are unregistered. At times it may be as many as 100,000 helpless, hopeless drifters. Of the 18,000 who are on the official lists, and therefore more likely to get work, only one earned enough last year to pay an income tax, and that was a woman who averaged $40 a week. (Her success was due primarily to the fact that she owned $3,500 worth of clothes.) Only 833 others of the gallant 18,000 were employed as much as one day a week throughout the year, at an average salary of $9 per diem. From these statistics, even an amateur mathematician (like the present writer), can figure out that only about one in 20 of the registered extras is privileged to earn the princely income of $500 a year.

The chances of an extra climbing to the eminence of star are not easily gauged, there being no exact figures on file. But it is safe to say that the odds against this miracle coming to pass are at least 10,000 to 1.

The HERALD of SAPULPA in Oklahoma thinks that the title makers of the movies are not being entirely fair to their product, editorially commenting:

Lurid, sexy film production titles have been decidedly misleading in the past few months. . . . Too often these titles have had nothing at all in common, hardly any connection whatsoever with the attraction as depicted on the screen. Will Hays will gain a feather in his cap for requiring a more consistent relationship between production and title representation.

"They (producers) give us pictures of life as it is today. They do not glorify crime and illicit love. . . . Children don't have to go to movies to learn undesirable things. The world is full of such object lessons. . . ."—Mrs. H. R. Berkshire, Logansport, Ind.

BATTLE FOR MILLIONS UNDERWAY AS WARNER ASKS ERPI SHOWDOWN

Universal Restores Salaries To Scale Before Cut Last May

Universal Pictures Corporation this week restored salaries to the scale which existed prior to the reduction of last May.

The announcement was issued Thursday, following upon the return of Carl Laemmle, president, from a sojourn in Europe and a week of analysis of business conditions reflected in Universal's 42 American exchanges and 58 foreign branches.

Universal was the last of the larger motion picture concerns to cut salaries and is the first to restore the normal scale.

The salary cut instituted in the spring was 15 per cent from all receiving $35 a week and upward. About 1,600 persons were affected. In a letter to employees Mr. Laemmle says:

"After a careful study of the general business situation and Universal's expanding business, I have decided to abolish our former salary reduction and to pay you, beginning with the next pay day, on the basis of your former salary. I know this will be joyous news to you and I assure you it takes a load off my own mind. I was mighty unhappy to make any cuts at all, but it was the wise thing to do. I thank you for the spirit in which you accepted the reductions and in which you carried on during the summer.

"I hardly feel it necessary to tell you that your utmost cooperation is needed more now than ever if we are to justify this return to the former salary basis. You must not relax for a moment in your determination to maintain all possible economies."

A stimulating piece of news was created by Mr. Carl Laemmle just prior to his departure for Hollywood after a week's review of company affairs in the Universal home office.

Mr. Laemmle abolished the salary reductions which had been in effect throughout the Universal Pictures Corporation since last May.

In a letter to employees of the company Mr. Laemmle stated that a study of general business conditions and the affairs of the Universal company, following his recent return from Europe, enabled him to make the decision to abolish the salary reductions and to restore the payroll figures to former levels.

This action on the part of Universal will be heartening to the trade at large as well as being an encouraging development to business generally, reflecting as it does the bright light of confidence and progressiveness against the drab picture that has been the business world during the past few months.

This depression will end, as have all former depressions.

Such action as this courageous and commendable one which has been taken by Mr. Laemmle is a swift and definite means of hastening the end of the depression and speeding the return of prosperity.

A. H. Giannini Coming East

Dr. A. H. Giannini, chairman of the board of the Bank of America, is en route to New York from Los Angeles after an extended stay on the West Coast. His close friends expect his trip to New York to result in an important decision on his personal future.

There have been rumors for several months that Dr. Giannini intended to furfill an often expressed desire to return to California permanently and would transfer his association from the Giannini New York banks to the Giannini California banks.

Dr. Giannini has long been associated with the financing of motion pictures. He was one of the first commercial bankers to finance picture production and was foremost in helping the business attain a sound credit basis.

Dr. Giannini with his brother, A. P. Giannini, founded the Bank of Italy in San Francisco and extended it up and down the Pacific Coast. Dr. A. H. Giannini came to New York, establishing for the Giannini group a foothold in an Eastern bank by the purchase of the Bowery & East River National Bank which was later merged with the Empire Trust Company and eventually became a part of the Bank of America, N. A., a unit of the tremendous Trans-America Corporation, the world's largest bank holding company.

Settlement of Royalties Claim Up To Arbiters

Upwards of $50,000,000 Due Producer for Role in Commercializing Sound, Is Charge

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

After some five years of secret conflict, the lines of battle have been joined between Warner and Western Electric. The issue is over Warner Brothers' claims to royalties on the art of the talking picture and running to the amazing sum of 50 millions of dollars.

The war is probably on its way to the courts, but for the time it is being waged in the sessions of a board of arbitrators as provided in the contract from which the controversy arises.

The arbitrators went into session Monday last and will likely be engaged in the taking of testimony for some two weeks.

The specific issue before the arbitrators is the charge that Electrical Research Products, Western Electric's sales subsidiary, has not paid Warner Brothers the royalties due on disc recording by the Western Electric system, in accordance with the agreement entered into when Warner Brothers undertook the commercialization of Western Electric's then new talking picture device.

Recalls Patents Case

The battle today tends to repeat in pattern the early history of the motion picture when the first decade and a half found the industry torn by litigation over camera and projector patents, culminating at last in the great case of the United States versus the Motion Picture Patents company. The sound patents tangle is quite as complex as those of the original picture mechanisms. The Warner-Western Electric war is but the first of a sequence of such controversies which the industry must ultimately face.

The secrecy thrown around the sessions of the arbitrators tends to increase the impression of their significance, and possibly also importance, to the industry at large. It is a kindly secrecy, but one at least designed to be effective. Held at the handsome executive offices of Western Electric, 195 Broadway, New York, the arbitrators met with representatives of the disputants in an elaborately maintained privacy.

Portals Guarded

From the Warner side came the statement that there was "nothing to be said at this time." From the Erpi side, "We long ago decided that this case would not be tried in the papers." Those charged with meeting gentlemen of the press admitted that "they had been cautioned to steer clear of the whole thing." Those charged with guarding the portals to the session chamber were as careful that no word get out and no question get in.

The contract under which the Warner claim is being arbitrated is one of April, 1927, on which a similar claim was made two years ago. The present claim therefore includes sound pictures produced during the past two years, as well as those before that, and the amount now claimed by Warner Brothers in unpaid royalties is understood to be upward of $50,000,000.

The Warner claim is centered in the contention that Erpi's method of licensing other producing companies and associated practices were contrary to the intent of the contract. To this Erpi replies with a blanket denial, offering at the same time to show that Warners failed to be always actuated by the clauses and spirit of this, now historical, document.

Specifically, the contract provides, in substance, that in return for the production, theatrical and exploitation facilities of Warner Brothers (Vitaphone Corporation), Western Electric, later acting through Electrical Research Products, would pay the film company 37½ per cent of eight per cent of the equipment concern's gross receipts on disc recording.

Antedated "Jazz Singer"

At the time this agreement was entered into, "The Jazz Singer" had not yet demonstrated what the talking picture was to become. That achievement surprised the world and revolutionized motion picture entertainment in the fall of 1927, and it was in the spring of 1926 that Warner Brothers formally agreed with Western Electric to be the means by which the invention should be brought before the public—for what response, nobody knew.

Other companies had already rejected this this new child of science. As in the case of wide film, such a radical innovation was frowned upon generally. It meant millions in investments, with the motion picture world turned upsidedown, and though the first motion picture ever devised was thought impossible of commercial success because no way could be found to give its actors voice, the silent picture had since become the world's story-teller. Ultimately approached by Walter J. Rich, persuasive Wall Street envoy extraordinary whom W. E. had engaged to "peddle" the idea to the film industry, the four Warner brothers—Sam was living then—deemed themselves in a position to gamble on the outcome.

The Effort to Put Sound Over

The Vitagraph studio already acquired by Warner Brothers was turned into a practical laboratory for the actual application of what Western Electric—more specifically, its parent company's Bell Laboratories—had contrived theoretically. In addition, Warners rented Hammerstein's Manhattan theatre in New York for further production of pictures with sound, and by the middle of summer of the same year, a full-length dramatic film, "Don Juan," was ready to be run through projectors in synchronization with a highly-amplified phonographic reproduction of interpretative orchestral music.

It wasn't much—as a demonstration of the audible screen. For those with less sensitive ears, such a combination of sound and pictorial sequence might have promised elimination of tinny pianos and mechanical or indifferently played organs in many theatres. But shown to the public in New York on August 6, along with a promising short in which the operatic tenor, Martinelli, was heard as well as seen singing, "Don Juan" failed to convince film leaders that sound could add anything worth revolutionizing a great industry for.

The Disc-or-Film Issue

The faith that the Warner brothers had in this "phonograph contraption" is significant in the light of subsequent events, culminating in the event of this week. Experimentation by actual production continued throughout that year and into the next, realizing some encouragement in a peculiar efficacy of sound to short subjects, permitting vaudeville acts and playlets.

Still there was no "Jazz Singer" when the contract of 1927 was drawn up, giving Warner Brothers a substantial share in Western Electric's income from sound, as the latter's co-worker in its commercial development. At that time, W. E. took over the activities of the Fox-case laboratory in developing sound-on-film. Participating only in the financial benefits accruing to W. E. from sound-on-disc, Warner interests lay in the retention and fostering of that method, which situation, however, failed to deter Western Electric scientists from pursuing the perfection of sound-on-film.

Then, in the fall of 1927, "The Jazz Singer." Western Electric (now more immediately, Erpi) and Warner Brothers, in contractual cooperation, had put the thing over. To the victors, the spoils—only now thousands of dollars became millions. A prize worth sharing, and in Europe as well as America, reproducing equipments other than Western Electric were brought forward.

In the United States one heard these others (except Photophone) called "bootleg" equipment, and one of the first was the Pacent Reproducer. It is now an Erpi contention that the former broke faith by backing this competitive apparatus. In the recent injunction suit brought by W. E. against Sol Wallerstein, Buffalo exhibitor, charging patent violations in his Pacent equipment, Warner Brothers took over the defense.

In Germany Warner Brothers also stepped outside of the American group awaiting a reciprocal arrangement between Klangfilm and Western Electric, and made its own agreement with the German interests whereby Warner product could be reproduced in that country—and W. E., so to speak, be damned.

Hiscock Succeeds Untermeyer

The original effort to settle the dispute between the partners so necessary to each other in 1926 and 1927, was postponed following the withdrawal of Samuel Untermeyer of New York from the arbitration committee upon his assuming an official connection with Fox. Appointment of a successor, who is Judge Hiscock of the New York Court of Appeals, now requires a completely new submission of testimony.

Representing Warner Brothers in the negotiations are George E. Quigley, president of the Vitaphone corporation; Abel Cary Thomas, secretary of Warner Brothers; and Senator Pepper of Pennsylvania. Representing Erpi are Green & Hurd, New York legal firm; J. E. Otterson, president, and Whitford Drake, vice-president, of the company.

Submission of the dispute to arbitration at this time follows the issuance of a financial statement showing a net loss for Warner Brothers during the first six months of the year, consequences of which were reflected this week in the fall of the common stock to 8¾, but four points above its low for the year. While Erpi has the right to appeal any decision of the arbitration committee to the courts, its acceptance of a decision awarding Warners a substantial portion of the royalties claimed would be a timely non-cinematic boost to the Warner exchequer likely to find amplification on the floor of the stock exchange.

Warner-Erpi Arbitrators

Members of the committee now completely rehearing in arbitration proceedings, the royalty dispute between Warner Brothers and Electrical Research Products, Inc., are:

Nathan Miller, former governor of the State of New York.

Frank Hogan of Washington, D. C.

Judge Hiscock of the New York Court of Appeals.

The first two named were members of the original committee appointed two years ago. Judge Hiscock succeeds Samuel Untermeyer, New York attorney, who resigned upon associating himself with the Fox Film Corporation during the latter's reorganization.

NEW MOVE FOR UNIFORM ZONING FINDS U. S. OFFICIALS FAVORABLE

Department of Justice Indicates "Fair and Reasonable Systems" Would Be Held Legal—Chaotic Situation Revealed in Territories; See Circuits Limited

The Department of Justice, MOTION PICTURE HERALD learns, has indicated to distributing organizations that there can be no question of the legality of zoning or protection when "fair and reasonable systems are evolved by a just representation of parties concerned."

The opinion comes at a time when the systems of protection in work throughout the country are being assailed as unfair or oppressive in numerous situations and, where no workable systems are in existence, protection is being bartered for blindly, or arbitrarily dictated by buying powers. The latter condition is most common throughout the country, a country-wide survey reveals.

Plan to Renew Uniformity Move

Although officials of the Department of Justice refused to comment publicly on the reported opinion, its authenticity is reflected in the plans of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to resume in the near future its efforts to install uniform zoning and protection systems throughout this country and Canada. These efforts were abandoned one year ago when a question of the legality of protection was raised.

Official of both the Hays' organization and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America believe that the present chaotic conditions arising from the absence of any uniform protection plan in a majority of the key centers would be removed by the establishment of uniform systems, and also believe that positive benefits would result to the small theatre and the independent operator from the establishment of such systems.

See Circuits Limited

Their belief is based on the protection limitations placed on circuits by a uniform zoning system; limitations which appreciably would reduce the protection now obtained by circuits in many situations. In addition, they say, a uniform system of zoning and protection would fix the maximum protection obtainable in given situations, and it is their belief that the maximum would not always be demanded by the circuits.

M. A. Lightman, president of the M P T O A, said that, whereas the national organization made no attempt to dictate to its affiliates, the board of directors of the organization favors "a fair and reasonable uniform protection system." Lightman said that such a system, equitably evolved, would be certain to eliminate the glaring instances of unreasonable protection which is accorded buying power, whether circuit or independent, in many situations.

In contrast with this attitude and presenting a serious obstacle in the way of any widespread installation of uniform protection systems is that of Allied States Exhibitors Association, which went on record at its last national convention as being "opposed to protection extending beyond the actual playing time of a picture, or giving any corporate city protection over another city."

Although there is no indication of any official change in Allied's attitude, there are numerous situations in which a uniform zoning system would result in better protection to Allied exhibitors who are operators of large theatres than would Allied's own proposal and, it is believed, little opposition to a uniform plan would be registered by these.

Hays office sponsors of the uniform protection plans are of the opinion that "99 exhibitors out of every hundred who are in a competitive situation want protection, regardless of whether they are circuits or independents."

Moreover, it is pointed out that "equitable agreements which are binding in the light of the recent Department of Justice opinion can be reached between exhibitors and distributors in spite of a registered minority obejction."

The explanation of this viewpoint lies in the reported understanding of the Department of Justice that the variance in picture rentals establishes a just basis for reasonable protection, and that the establishment of "fair and reasonable" schedules implies concessions on the part of buying power as well as on the part of the small scale exhibitor. Such schedules, when equitably arrived at, may be legally binding on the assumption that what is fair for one is fair for another, and may thus be established despite the protests of objectors.

Predict Adoption Soon

In announcing that the Hays office shortly would resume sponsorship of efforts to establish uniform zoning and protection systems throughout the country, a spokesman for the organization declared that widespread adoption of uniform schedules was looked for within the next few months, and that but little opposition to them was expected. This same official advanced the belief that the existing chaotic conditions resulting from the lack of adequate and established protection systems within the industry have placed both circuit and independent exhibitors in a frame of mind favorable toward the adoption of orderly protection schedules. Where uniform protection systems are in work, he pointed out, there is a minimum of complaints from competing exhibitors, and where arbitrary or haphazard systems are in vogue there is widespread unrest and dissatisfaction, frequently reflected in recourse to agencies outside the industry.

This official's views are corroborated by a national survey of protection conditions just

Western Electric Omits Quarterly

Directors of Western Electric omitted the quarterly dividend due this week. The company's announcement said that "owing to decreased volume of sales, the directors took no action on the dividend."

Three months ago a dividend of 75 cents a share was declared, and $1 a share was paid for the first quarter of 1931. Announcement of the dividend action was followed by a three-point drop in the price of stock of American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric's parent organization.

AMERICA—AS A BRITISH EDITOR SEES IT

Has the Industry Forgotten, at the Instance of Its Financiers, That the Picture Is the Deciding Factor?

By L. H. CLARK
Editor, TODAY'S CINEMA, London

General depression notwithstanding, the American film industry has only itself to blame for its present situation. Broadly it is suffering from the ill-considered and too hurried launching of the talkies upon a public grown critical of the quality of the silent film product, but more particularly from its neglect to consolidate the people's faith in the greatest form of entertainment in the world at the time when that faith was most malleable.

Success disturbed the balance of many of those responsible for the industry's well-being, and today the difficult lessons of the pioneer days are being learned all over again.

Jugglery and Incompetency

Financial jugglery and individual incompetency have to answer for this lamentable position. The film has been relegated to the level of mere merchandise produced on factory lines and the reaction has been hastened by world depression.

The film industry has forgotten, at the instance of its financiers, that the film is the deciding factor. A season of good films will put it on the road to prosperity and a continuance of worthwhile product will obviate its ever again feeling so terribly the effects of general depression. Just as surely as our trade was the last to suffer so will it be the first to recover, but only through good films.

Opinions may differ on what constitutes good films, but it should be obvious that the tastes of the masses alone count at the box office. Such supposed tastes have in the past been responsible for doses of cheap hokum and sensationalism—no sensible person would state that the masses can be educated to a highbrow level by a few productions even by the cleverest directors—but there is such a thing as serving hash delicately. Less talk about living down to the public and more about living up to the ideals of decent people would prove distinctly advantageous.

Less Sex and Crime

Let us have less sex, crime and sophistication, fewer photographed stage plays, more action and less dialogue. To judge by the success of "Bad Girl," even New York welcomes simplicity; while the reception given British International's "Dreyfus Case" augurs very well for the "different" type of film.

Necessarily, the reduction of gross receipts will tend towards still greater economy in production. And that can be achieved without boomerang tactics by the elimination of waste before the director takes the floor. The story selection committee initiated by one of the biggest American companies is a step in the right direction—the reduction of the "yes" men ranks another. Drastic salary cutting is a falacious procedure but a considered elimination of "dead wood" much more than temporarily advantageous. A star is worth, within reason, the money he or she can draw at the box office, but the departmental head whose narrow outlook affects adversely those whom he engages for their ability to work as thinking individuals, can easily destroy that asset. Unfortunately, the industry suffers from many such parasites whose insidous weaknesses undermine the brilliant work contributed by those who place the welfare of the industry before that of the individual.

MISS L. H. CLARK, editor of Today's Cinema, London daily trade publication, who this week completed a two-month's study of pictures and conditions in the industry in Canada and throughout the United States, and, who, prior to returning to England, wrote exclusively for MOTION PICTURE HERALD a general summary of the industry as she finds it today in this country.

Of especial interest to those in America is Miss Clark's analysis of the market in Great Britain, particularly in its relationship to English activities of U. S. companies.

Needs to Reorganize Personnel

The industry needs reorganizing upon reformatory lines insofar as its personnel is concerned. Its methods of distribution and relations with the exhibitor generally (despite the perpetual chorus of moans) are quite satisfactory.

Insofar as the British market is concerned, it still has an undiminished appetite for American films, but that it should sometimes demonstrate a preference for its own product is natural. Let America concentrate on making better product of a not too definitely national type dealing with the simple rather than the complex, and there need be no diminution in the grosses from English-speaking countries. The British public today leans towards its home product for obvious reasons but continues to buy entertainment.

Our (British) producers generally imitate rather than originate, but slowly and surely they are achieving a standard higher than it has been ever before. We, too, have forgotten to profit by the other fellow's mistakes, but there is no doubt that the British film is becoming a strong competitor in world markets.

Must Improve Standard

British films may sometimes lack the snap and sparkle of the American—but that, after all is a matter of national outlook. They have however that care for detail and inherent sincerity that are quite as necessary components of successful entertainment.

To refer to the fact that so few British films are shown on this side is to reopen a dangerous subject. A distributor has every right to pick and choose his "outside" product in accordance with his idea of the public's taste, and we do not expect our mediocre films to succeed abroad when they scarcely get by at home. But we do not expect to continue to show mediocre or exclusively national foreign films when British product is available.

British Public Easily Moved

America will find her foreign markets increasingly difficult to satisfy unless the general standard of entertainment improves considerably. Each year, a number of outstanding films are produced—the great majority by America—and from these, goodwill, such as far transcends financial receipt is promoted throughout the world. By the general trend of affairs, the day is not far distant when only films of such a standard will find a sale abroad. And America can only maintain her share of the world market by extending the viewpoint of her producers beyond the confines of Broadway audiences. Sophisticated patrons can appreciate simplicity where the masses cannot absorb subtlety, and only such pictures can prove general successes.

Broadly, the most sophisticated offerings are those containing the most dialogue, and the demand is for less talk and more action. The restful charm that permeated the cinema in the days of the silent film must be brought back.

The British public is critical of story values but comparatively easily moved to

THE Musicians' Union in Chicago evidently knows how to handle its bad boys, as learned from the following which appears in the current issue of the union's own publication.

"Concerning One Jimmy Balletto"

"Here was a member who thought he could do as he pleased in this jurisdiction. The Union meant nothing to him whenever its rules and regulations interfered with his activities.

"Balletto was a bulldozer who figured he could ride roughshod over anyone who opposed him. He had a 'drag'—to hear him tell it—and boasted that he could do anything he saw fit to do and get away with it.

"Just how much of a drag Mr. Balletto really had was revealed when it came to a show-down. He found out that he was 'just another member'; one of the eight thousand who have to comply with the laws of the Local, or lose their membership. Balletto learned, as have so many others before him, that:—No Member Is Bigger Than His Union!

"Balletto was fined $1,000 by the Board of Directors for paying for only two doubles on an engagement where three doubles were used, and for using vile and threatening language to the member who reported him."

WARNERS CLEAR AWAY DEADWOOD

No Effort Is Made to Minimize Prospective Losses — Decks Are Cleared for Rise in Attendance

By THE ANALYST

While Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., probably will show a depletion in surplus of more than $8,000,000 during the fiscal year ended August 31, considerably more than half this amount shows on the reports of the company as the clearing away of deadwood and there is reason to believe that a considerable proportion of the remainder can be charged against operations of the company other than the motion picture production and distribution and theatre operation divisions. While the total charges against surplus for the fiscal year total only $6,407,968 in the latest report issued by the company, this report covers but the first nine months of the year, and in view of President H. M. Warner's statement that the fourth quarter will show a loss and that it covers the worst period of the year for the motion picture activities of the company, it is safe to assume that the company will show an additional loss about equal to that from operations shown in the third quarter, which amounted to $2,613,600.

Thorough Housecleaning

An examination of the three quarterly reports which have been issued, however, shows that the company has made no effort to minimize prospective losses. It is apparent that the officers of the company, when faced with the situation which developed a year ago, decided to make a thorough housecleaning and from the reports of the first nine months of operations the indications are that the directors not only refrained from deferring losses, but actually anticipated the worst that could happen and charged them off so that the company would be rid of the barnacles that were slowing up progress.

On February 28, the end of the second quarter of the fiscal year, the company charged direct to surplus an amount of $3,073,369 in respect to inventories and accounts reecivable of the radio and record division of the company. It is obvious that this amount was an estimate as to all possible losses that might be sustained through a decline in the value of finished product. Much of this was in the hands of dealers and the best that the company could do would be to anticipate the largest possible amount that might be thrown back into the hands of the manufacturers. The marking down of the inventory was also done on a basis of the selling prices quoted by competitors, in a great many instances prices used in retail stores in forced sales being employed as a basis upon which to compute the market value of inventory.

Could Have Deferred Charge

Not content with this housecleaning, the company charged off an additional $2,073,230 as a write-down of the buildings and properties owned by the radio and record division. This was a charge which could have been deferred without any criticism as the usual depreciation had already been charged against these properties and such a loss need not have been met except in the sales of the properties. The action of the directors in approving this write-down was an indication, evidently, of the determination to reduce all assets to a market value instead of maintaining a fictitious book value for the purposes of a more favorable financial statement.

These two amounts alone account for $5,146,599 of the $6,873,736 which had been charged against surplus during the first nine months of the fiscal year. The remainder of the charges to surplus above the operating loss from the period are made up of a transfer of Federal tax reserve and a property sale adjustment amounting to sixteen or seventeen thousand dollars.

Rigid Amortization

With these amounts wiped off, the radio and record division has been put on a basis where no further losses through a shrinkage in inventory or property value can be anticipated. The motion picture division has been under a system of the most rigid amortization of production costs that is used in the whole industry since 1925. This system as disclosed to the New York Stock Exchange makes no allowance at all against production costs to be amortized by income from foreign countries, and regardless of the earnings of the picture it is charged off entirely within 88 weeks after it has started making an income.

This system of amortization charges off 50 per cent of the entire production cost by the end of the sixteenth week that the picture has been shown in theaters, regardless of the release date upon which most systems of amortization are based. Within the next ten weeks an additional 15¾ per cent is charged off and then the weekly amortization becomes slightly smaller, so that within the next six months sufficient percentages are charged off at stated periods to have amortized 86½ per cent of the production cost at the end of a year. The amortization of positive prints is so arranged so that their entire cost is charged off in one year. Property depreciation is charged at the same rigid rates.

Attendance Increasing

In view of this system of amortization in the motion picture division and the special write-offs in the radio and record division it would seem likely that there are no heavy charges to be met in the future. Regardless of the earning capacity of the pictures which were released during the fiscal year, their costs have been charged off under the amortization system, with their earning capacity in foreign countries practically untouched. With the radio and record division on this same cleaned up basis it is obvious that the company is in a position to profit by any increase in theatre attendance.

This increase in theatre attendance has already started. The Warner Theatres have, in common with the other circuits, been experiencing a much better income from their theatres since the last two weeks in August. The reason they give is the same as that of other companies, "better pictures and more favorable weather." The "better pictures" reason is undoubtedly true in the case of Warner Brothers. "Night Nurse," "The Star Witness" and "Five Star Final" are resulting in grosses which were not approached by productions released in the fiscal year which the company has just concluded. These pictures, and others, of the new year releases have had another effect. Rental contracts at the present time are 35 per cent greater than they were at this time last year.

While the revival in theatre going came too late to affect the earnings of the last quarter of the fiscal year of Warner Brothers to any appreciable extent, it has continued long enough so that it is safe to predict that the first quarter of the new fiscal year will put a different financial complexion on the reports of the company. With no further heavy charges to be met it is more than probable that the report for the three months which have just started will permit the company to show a profit on a quarterly basis for the first time in a year.

Service, Indeed!

Seven hundred patrons of the Colonial theatre, Detroit, were turned into the street when a court order was served transferring the disputed ownership of the theatre in the middle of a performance.

Jake Schreiber, Detroit exhibitor, was successful in establishing a claim to the theatre after a lengthy legal contest. Schreiber claimed that he had purchased the Colonial from Ben and Lou Cohen, but his possession rights were disputed by the former owners, and denied him by a circuit court decision. Schreiber carried the case to the Michigan supreme court, which reversed the circuit court's decision, and ordered the Cohens to surrender the theatre.

When the order was served, lights in the house were darkened and the patrons departed. The theatre reopened immediately afterward with Schreiber established as the new owner.

LESS THAN 20 MUSICAL PICTURES ON PRODUCTION PLANS FOR SEASON

Only Seven "Full Fledged" Musical Shows

And Most Will Be Labeled "Comedies With Music"—Publishers Predict Return of Songs

Producers and distributors will not continue with plans of staging an intended quiet, but conservative comeback in 1931-32 for musicals. Less than 20 will be made by all companies, and the majority of these will be labeled "comedies with music," rather than "musical comedies," in order to avoid the stigma attached to straight musicals, which died a sudden and most pronounced death one year ago because of an over-production of this type of picture. Only seven "full-fledged" musical shows will be produced this season.

That there is a market for pictures with music, song and dance done on a moderate and intelligent scale, practically all in the musical and film fields agree, but few companies intend, apparently, to jeopardize production costs on more than one or two such productions. Fox takes the lead with five, United Artists, RKO and Paramount following with three each.

At the Warner-First National office, which organization pioneered and led others in developing the musical comedy era of a season ago, it is felt that musical comedies will be back, but their success depends entirely upon the manner in which music and song are interspersed throughout.

None from Columbia

Columbia Pictures have made no plans whatsoever for musicals this season.

Of the 48 Fox pictures issued in the year beginning August, 1931, five will be plays with music. In only one of these, "Delicious," will more than one song be used. They're all dramatic stories with incidental music, as follows: "Young as You Feel," in which Fifi Dorsay sings to Will Rogers "The Cute Little Things You Do," a current song. "Merely Mary Ann," in which the song, "Kiss Me Goodnight, Not Goodbye," is woven into the dramatic structure and forms part of the plot of this Izrael Zangwill play; the song has been made on five records and frequently is heard on the radio. "In Her Arms," with songs laid in Paris and in gondolas in Venice, with romantic music running through the picture. "Heart Free," in which Janet Gaynor will appear opposite James Dunn, with story by George DeSylva and incidental music. "Delicious," an original by Guy Bolton, with music by George and Ira Gershwin, including four songs: "Blah, Blah, Blah, Blah With You," "Delicious," "Somebody from Somewhere" and "You Started It."

Two are listed on the MGM schedule: Lawrence Tibbet's "The Cuban" and "Flying High." Dorothy Fields and Jimmie McHugh wrote four songs for "Flying High," including "Dance Until the Dawn," "Happy Landings," "There's Love in the Air," and a comedy number. "Flying High" is an adaptation of the Bert Lahr stage play. It features Lahr and Charlotte Greenwood. It will present five songs, four by Fields and McHugh, as previously mentioned, and one by De Sylva, Brown and Henderson. Adaptation was made by A. P. Younger and Martin Broones from the stage script of De Sylva, Brown, Henderson and McGowan. Dance ensembles have been prepared by Busby Berkeley, with direction by Charles Riesner.

Three Chevalier Musicals

Paramount's list of musicals embrace only three Maurice Chevalier vehicles, commencing with "One Hour With You." All will be straight musicals of the type which Chevalier has appeared in previously for Paramount Publix, all to be handled along lines similar to "The Smiling Lieutenant."

At RKO, a production executive stated that "there's nothing like any trend towards musical productions within this company." The company will do only one "full-fledged" musical show, "Girl Crazy," with present indications that there will be no dance choruses to hold up the action. "Marcheta" will have incidental musical, more as a background than anything else. Likewise "Bird of Paradise." "Girl Crazy" will be a Wheeler-Woolsey-Dorothy Lee show.

To date, RKO Pathe's musical comedy ambitions are dormant.

Tiffany will not have any.

Three from United Artists

Three United Artists pictures for the coming season have songs and music in them. "Palmy Days" is an out-and-out musical, as was "Whoopee." Gloria Swanson in "Tonight Or Never" will sing one or two songs, and there are two songs in "The Age For Love."

Universal officials continue to be "fed-up" with musicals after the Whiteman "headache."

Warner-First National combined production forces will have only one, "Her Majesty, Love," with lyrics by Al Dubin, written for this Marilyn Miller picture, with the song and musical action centering around a Berlin cabaret.

Big Four is the only independent signifying any intentions of entering the musical comedy field. And, at this company's headquarters, it was stated that even present plans for the one now scheduled may not materialize.

Leaders in the music publishing field, however, predict a return to songs.

An analysis of the group shows only six companies with musical or song pictures for the forthcoming season. Fox has five with one song each and one with four; MGM's two are divided, with one, the Tibbett song, a straight music and song vehicle, and the second containing but one song. Paramount's, of course, are three straight Chevalier types, while two of RKO's will have little music and the third a full-show. Two of United Artists each have two songs and the third is planned as a full-fledged musical comedy. Warner and Big Four each plan one, partly with music.

One reason for the lack of interest in all-musicals, as pointed out by the executive of a major company, rests in their inability to garner more than $500,000 or $600,000, which is not sufficient in view of the usually heavy production costs attendant on elaborate musicals. "The sensational successes," he said, "have not topped $800,000, and they just cannot make musicals for less than $500,000, the most modest of them. Add $150,000 for overhead—and where are you?"

George Gershwin, musical authority and producer of musical comedies, said that "unfortunately, too many musical pictures were carelessly made, resulting in the public's fighting shy of them. I have always had faith in musical pictures."

Not Dead, Says Sam Fox

"Motion picture songs are by no means dead," according to Sam Fox, president of Sam Fox Publishing Company, publishers of music heard in Fox pictures.

"We are selling more sheet music of 'Kiss Me Goodnight, Not Goodbye,' than of anything we have put out in years," he said. This is the song, with words and music by Jules Furthman, parts of which are heard in "Merely Mary Ann."

According to heads of other music companies, there is a definite trend toward the revival of songs in forthcoming pictures. A statement made by Buddy Morris, head of the Warner Brothers music subsidiaries (M. Witmark & Sons, J. Remick & Co., and Harms, Inc.), is in fact completely contrary to the one issued by the Warner Pictures home office. Morris stated that Warner Brothers intends to use songs in many forthcoming productions. He stated that there is a possibility of ten using songs out of the contemplated 70 pictures which Warner and First National will make. "The main point," said Morris, "is that music will be used in any pictures which warrant their use."

Morris leaves on Sunday with Jack L. Warner for the coast.

Jack Robbins, of Robbins Music Company, publishers for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is also of the opinion that songs will shortly be a main feature of many pictures.

M. Winkler, general manager of De Sylva, Brown & Henderson, is also under the impression that in the near future many pictures will have songs as a prominent part of their entertainment.

Fair Enough, "Al"

Al Steffes, Allied chief in the Northwest, told exhibitors at Minneapolis that they should not have in mind any wild attempt to throw contracts out the window, advising them to read agreements carefully before signing, but live up to their end of the contract after consummation of the deal.

Columbia Officers and Directors Are Re-elected

Officers and directors of Columbia were re-elected for another year at the company's annual meeting held in New York this week. Joe Brandt continues as president; Harry Cohn, vice-president; Jack Cohn, secretary-treasurer, and Abe Schneider, assistant secretary-treasurer. Directors, in addition to the above-named officers, include Nathan Burkan, counsel, and S. S. Goddard and T. Blankey, bankers' representatives.

Earnings of $31.63 on the preferred stock, after deduction of dividends, is shown in Columbia's annual statement for the year ended June 27. Earnings are equivalent to $3.09 per share on the common stock.

Comerford Halts Bank Run

Threatened runs on several banks at Scranton, Pa., this week were halted by M. E. Comerford, veteran theatre executive, who publicly addressed crowds of mob proportions by a system of radio amplifiers and convinced them of the safety of the threatened institutions. The runs were started by the closing of a private bank, which led to the shutting down of one state bank.

Owners Demand Concessions

The Associated Theatre Managers of New Orleans, representing Loew's, RKO and Publix, are demanding no long-term contracts, salary cuts from 15 to almost 30 per cent and other concessions in negotiations with billposters, stage hands, projectionists and musicians for new contracts.

Form National, Central, Zone Committees

All Branches and All Sections of the Country Are Represented Under Leadership of Hays Office

Every section of the country and every branch of the motion picture industry is represented in the concentrated effort toward relief of unemployment within the confines of the film business, which, centered in the Hays organization, has already taken definite preparatory action looking to a a speedy administration of the relief measures.

The planning committee, composed of 16 appointees of Will H. Hays, completed a three-day session on Wednesday, during which it selected a national committee, a central committee and five sub-committees to begin immediately in the mobilization of the industry forces necessary to the successful culmination of the relief effort, and "to assist recognized community agencies in unemployment relief, sustention of general morale and fulfillment of the industry's duties within its own ranks."

Myers and Lightman Named

Will Hays was requested to act as chairman of both the national and central committees. He named Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, and M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, as vice chairmen of the national committee. In addition 32 distribution zone committees are in the course of selection, which will cover the entire country and be responsible for the formation of city committees.

The unanimity of opinion with which the effort has been greeted is indicated by the complete and ready acceptance with which the original planning committee has met with regard to committee posts.

Speeding Plans, Says Hays

Will H. Hays, commenting on the situation, said:

"We will quickly be prepared all along the line, extending into the local communities, to cooperate effectively with authorized local agencies in the specific problem of relief. Concentration of effort where it will do the most good is the keynote in this phase.

"In the matter of psychological stimulus, too, we have a duty to perform, and we will do it. This war against depression calls for wartime spirit and devotion of money and manpower.

"Thirdly, we will look to our own household problems. If all businesses do that, simple arithmetic will add the results, and the sum will be victory."

M. A. Lightman pointed the way toward complete cooperation when he said: "We are not content to mitigate a depression; we are going to speed up the coming recov-

WHEN THE SCREEN TEACHES

RITA C. McGOLDRICK

WITH the reopening of the schools, "School and Screen" renews its services to those groups and individuals seriously concerned in the study of the child and his entertainment requirements. In the spring this department was established as an experiment. The first pamphlet was sent out tentatively feeling its way. The questionnaires on pictures of educational value were a new idea. Would they be of practical assistance to teachers in the grades? Would the theatre man see in them a definite reason for booking endorsed pictures in his theatre? Would local club groups vision in this movement a reason for coordination of effort? Would school authorities cooperate with theatre managers to make the plan a practical success for both? We had no way of knowing the answers to these significant questions; and we had no way of anticipating the deluge of response that has poured in upon us.

This year, more than ever before, the school world is analytically interested in the actual tests and results of visual education. Early in the summer a group of students comprising representatives from the District of Columbia and forty-seven states were gathered together for an experiment in visual education at George Washington University, in Washington, D. C. They were given a series of written questions on volcanoes, glaciers, rivers, toads and the Monarch butterfly. Following the written answers, the same group of young people watched a series of sound motion pictures on the same subjects; and the following day they were given another written test. The experiment, which was held under the direct auspices of the United States Commissioner of Education, was made for the purpose of determining with a fair degree of accuracy whether or not sound pictures were an adjunct to present day school and college curricula.

Conclusions Startling

The conclusions drawn from the students' answers before and after their sound picture experience were startling. The report shows that these boys and girls were able to answer, on an average, nineteen more questions out of fifty on each test after seeing the sound picture; or a gain of 38 per cent. The Committee summarizing the results said, "This pure gain in information is, of course, in addition to any of the other values usually ascribed to visual aids, such as increased interest in the subject, better understanding of time and place relationships, development of ability to visualize details, and so on." The argument is unanswerable, as is the age old adage, "Seeing is believing."

But the entertainment screen offers something more to the average school child than the episodic lessons in geology, or botany or natural history. With the whole world to draw from for its background, the entertainment screen presents reincarnated pages of history; modern high adventure; the unfolding romance of aircraft; the wonders of science and invention; mountain ranges, plains and prairies; tropical beauty or Arctic desolation. But more than all of these things, it is the medium for visual lessons in character development; it is the understandable cross section of life itself, with its laughter and tears, its heroism and self sacrifices, its human interest and its highlights of comedy. The screen, however, does not hesitate to use the hates and the crimes, the perversions and the false moral values for its material when it chooses. It remains for those of us interested in the school children of the nation to help them to know and to select the gold instead of the dross.

Within this year we are to witness a concerted action on the part of the producers in behalf of better pictures. This is the year in which we are to have a cycle of family audience features; exceptional travelogues, juvenile comedies and detective thrillers. The fall schedules of the major companies are brimful of worthwhile things. It is to be a season of higher grade motion picture fare; and it is to be a test by which the requirements of the critical public are to be measured. Will we support these finer things as they deserve, or will we allow them to falter at the box office while the gangsters and the glamorous ladies of uncertain virtue bring in the big financial return?

Higher Schools' Cooperation

We believe that the extraordinary impetus that "School and Screen" has won in the first few months of its existence predicts a year of wide-flung activity by public groups everywhere in behalf of good pictures. This department is ready to cooperate in every possible way with any group or individual wishing to make use of its facilities.

Since the establishment of "School and Screen," more than five hundred of the leading schools and colleges of the country have sent voluntary letters of congratulation and offers of cooperation to MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The list of these, too long to print, includes the following:

Horace Mann School, New York City.
University of Kentucky.
Boston Continuation School.
Harvard University.
Utah State Agricultural College.
Bucknell University, Penn.
De Paul University, Chicago.
Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa.
New York University.
Academy of Religious Arts, Boston.
University of Texas.
Carnegie Institute, Washington, D. C.
College of New Rochelle, New York City.
Moss Institute, Mass.
Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge.
State University of Iowa.
Yale University.
University of Pennsylvania.
Teachers College, Greely, Colorado.
University of California.
University of Idaho.

A department that has for its definite aims:

1. To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and money for the poorer kind.
2. To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.
3. By winning support for high type pictures to offer an incentive to producers to make more of the same kind.

Lost Valley

Distributed (on West Coast) by Educational

Acted by Boy Scouts

"Lost Valley" is the story of a troop of Boy Scouts on an adventurous hike through the western mountains where they encounter an old prospector who has been injured and to whom they give aid. He tells them the story of the Lost Valley and of the thrilling phantom of that country, which fires their interest for further quest. The picture has atcion and excitement. There are the required number of "bad men"; there are Indians, and there is a lovely Indian maiden whom they rescue. A short film running less than half an hour, this picture has an excellent message for boys and presents in an interesting way the activities, aims and best ideals of the Boy Scouts.

1. In what part of the United States is Lost Valley?
2. Describe the mountainous country through which the Scouts adventured.
3. How were they dressed for a hike of this kind?
4. Where the uniforms regulation Scout outfits?
5. Describe the old prospector.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN offers authoritative information to educators, teachers, club groups and theatremen on the better things of the screen. The questionnaires published herewith are designed for free distribution in the schools, with the suggestion that the pupils be encouraged to answer the questions in the classroom after they have seen the recommended picture.

Penrod and Sam

First National Pictures

Stars: Leon Janney, Junior Coghlan. In the cast are Dorothy Peterson, Matt Moore, Zazu Pitts and Johnny Arthur.

"Penrod and Sam," like "Huckleberry Finn," is a delightful study of engaging children whose woes and trials and triumphs, whose dogs and pals and small possessions are the most vital things in life. The story, from the pen of Booth Tarkington, has lent itself with particular grace to film adaptation. The author of "The Gentleman from Indiana," "Monsieur Beaucaire" and "The Man from Home" deserves to be brought to the attention of the school child in intimate classroom discussion. "Penrod and Sam" is a clean, high type family audience picture which every child should be encouraged to see.

1. Who wrote the story "Penrod and Sam"?
2. What state has he made famous in his books?
3. What other name is often given to this state?
4. Name three other books by the same author.
5. Is he still living?
6. What kind of boy was Penrod?
7. Describe his dog Duke.
8. In what kind of school was he educated?
9. What did the students sing at the opening of the session?
10. What do you sing at the opening of school?
11. Describe the boys' club.
12. What happened to Duke?
13. How did this affect Penrod?
14. Why did you like his mother?
15. Tell the story of the burial of Duke.
16. Describe the sale of the lot.
17. Whom did you admire most in this picture?
18. What do you think was its most exciting moment?
19. Compare the boys in "Penrod and Sam" with the boys in "Tom Sawyer" or "Huckleberry Finn?"
20. Which group did you like the best, and why?

Write a composition of 250 words on: "My Dog and I."

The Spirit of Notre Dame

A Universal Picture

Stars: Lew Ayres, with Frank Carideo, the Four Horsemen, William Bakewell and Sally Blane.

Dedicated to the Memory of Knute Rockne

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is, without question, the greatest of the sports pictures to have come to the screen. Dedicated to Rockne, it is the story of the character building of men; it is the romance of great football as Notre Dame has played it with her teams whose members have made brilliant football history. It is a gripping, thrilling school drama without a leading lady and with little heart interest. It is also conspicuously lacking in the cheap college clap-trap that has marred so many pictures.

Rockne was on his way to California to confer with executives of Universal about a football picture when the plane crashed and he met his death. The men of his teams who counted him their friend as well as their coach determined to go on with the picture as a memorial to him. "The Spirit of Notre Dame" is the result. It strikes a new note of fineness in screen entertainment and should be influential in bringing a new dignity and integrity to intercollegiate sports.

1. Where is Notre Dame University?
2. What is the difference between a university and a college?
3. Who was Knute Rockne?
4. When did he die?
5. What was there about Rockne that made him so famous a coach?
6. How did he deal with his men?
7. Describe the methods he used in physical training.
8. What is a "varsity" team?
9. Describe the freshman "workout."
10. Why are four of the team called "The Four Horsemen?"
11. What is their attitude toward their coach?
12. How do the stars of the team treat the younger boys?
13. Tell the story of Bucky's sportsmanship.
14. Name three points in teamwork which this picture demonstrates.
15. What is the outstanding characteristic of the teams at play?
16. What is the most exciting moment of the picture?
17. What will you remember longest about this story?
18. Compare this with other college pictures you have seen.
19. Did this one seem very true to life?
20. What is the Spirit of Notre Dame?

Write a composition of 250 words on "School Spirit."

Important Short Subjects

SCHOOL AND SCREEN offers to the exhibitors of the country a program of active co-operation between educational institutions and the theatre, a program which will be beneficial to the exhibitor playing pictures of significance to the classroom. Principals and teachers in cities and towns of the nation will receive this publication's better pictures service.

Huckleberry Finn

A Paramount Picture

Stars: Junior Durkin, Jackie Coogan, Jackie Searle and Mitzi Green.

In the same class with "Tom Sawyer," sparkling in dialogue, cleverly acted and rich in human interest, "Huckleberry Finn" has scored as a complete success. It is a delightful story of commonplace children brightened in the telling by the whimsicality of Mark Twain's genius. Although the picture does not follow his famous book exactly, it has retained enough of its spirit and gleam to set it apart as fine entertainment, not only for the small people in the audience, but for all the adults in the land.

"Huckleberry Finn" is one more spoke in the wheel of important pictures for juveniles. In itself it is not an educational feature, but it is clean, gay entertainment; its authorship and background offer excellent opportunity for classroom discussion.

1. Have you read the book "Huckleberry Finn"?
2. By whom was it written?
3. In what way does the picture differ from the book?
4. Name three other books by the same author.
5. During what years did he live?
6. For what type of book is he best known?
7. Name one serious biography that he wrote.
8. What other story of his has been made into a motion picture?
9. Describe Huckleberry Finn as he appears on the screen?
10. What is chief characteristic?
11. Who are his companions on the raft on the river?
12. Describe their adventures on the river?
13. What is the name of the river?
14. Through what kind of country does it flow?
15. What other type of craft did you notice on the river?
16. Describer the country school house.
17. Compare Huckleberry's classroom with your own.
18. What was the most exciting moment in the picture?
19. What do you think of the children's acting?
20. Did these children and their adventures seem real to you?

Write a composition of 250 words on: "Adventures on a River."

FIGHT ON BOOTLEG EXCHANGES IN COURT

Several Suits Launched by Copyright Protection Bureau After Raids in Film Piracy Inquiry

Concentrated action against so-called "bootleg" exchanges trading in condemned prints is underway, with several raids and seizures made by United States marshals following investigation by the Copyright Protection Bureau, and with one case coming to trial next Tuesday, in the United States district court, southern district of New York.

The Bureau, while stated to be outside the MPPDA, nevertheless maintains a close working association with the members of the Hays organization.

Several suits for damages have been launched under the copyright law as sequels to the seizures of films by the federal authorities acting on writs provided by the courts.

1600 Rolls of Film Seized

Sixteen hundred rolls of copyrighted films owned by Pathe Exchange, Inc., were seized by the marshals on a writ issued by the federal district court in New Jersey, and suit was filed. Fifty-five reels were taken up last week at the Apollo Exchange in the Film Centre Building, 630 Ninth avenue, it is reported. Metropolitan Motion Picture Company in Newark also is declared to have been an objective of the Bureau's activities. The Apollo Exchange case comes up Tuesday in federal district court, New York, with Louis Nizer, general counsel for the New York Film Board, prosecuting the action. Counsel for the defendant exchange is Louis Ogust.

The Bureau points out that investigation throughout the country shows that prints of pictures which have been ordered junked have been bobbing up to the annoyance of their rightful owners. The assumption of the companies had been that the thousands of reels had been destroyed by those to whom they had been delivered; instead, they were patched, glued and synchronized and resurrected for sale.

The "bootleg" exchanges, says the Bureau, have been surreptitiously storing and distributing the films with complete disregard of the fire laws and disposing of them to foreign buyers as well as to exhibitors in the United States. Newark fire department officials particularly protested at the unsafe manner of storage of these defective films. Several exchanges, it is charged, openly distributed the pictures in direct competition with the distributors who actually owned the product.

Prints have disappeared from building platforms and reappeared just as mysteriously after they have been duped at a nearby laboratory.

Months of investigation have disclosed this form of film piracy in operation in Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, New York, Newark and other cities. And while the Newark raid was in progress, the Bureau was collecting evidence against five suspected exchanges in several cities, following complaints from national and regional distributors.

Several pirated films were seized at a theatre in Irvington, N. J., under a federal court order. Several such productions had been supplied and exhibited at the theatre in the last few months, the Bureau learned; the prints had come from a Newark exchange which had been raided the week before.

At a theatre in Brooklyn, where a confiscation was made, the exhibitor said he had bought the film from one of the exchanges under investigation. And when a Pathe print was taken up in a theatre in Philadelphia the exhibitor asserted he had purchased it from an exchange in that city.

Prints of several national distributors were found in a raid at the Film Centre Building in New York last week on an order from the federal district court. The operators of this exchange had denied having pictures belonging to other copyright owners. But examination of pictures being inspected revealed several prints belonging to Pathe and others.

Then United States marshals found the vaults of the exchange in another part of the building, and seized several additional prints and reported upon titles of numerous pictures of other national distributors. Suit was filed at once against the owners and operators of the exchange.

Most Fox Houses In East Claimed Set For Skouras

A verbal agreement has already been reached between Harry C. Arthur, Fox Theatres general manager, and Spyros Skouras, by which the latter will take over 47 Fox houses in the East. Actual signing has been delayed but is expected any day. The deal covers all Fox houses in Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn, except the Roxy in Manhattan and the Fox in Brooklyn.

Important in the deal is the "gentlemen's agreement" between Loew's and Paramount to keep out of each other's territory. The difficulty is expected to be straightened out, however, with Loew officials. Arthur, slated for a circuit swing, September 15, has delayed departure pending the outcome of the Skouras deal.

The deal by which the M. E. Comerford circuit and Publix would have acquired 32 upstate Fox houses, is reported definitely to have fallen through. Skouras is reported dickering for these houses. Provided the Loew angle is taken care of, Skouras-Publix will take over all Fox houses east of St. Louis by October 1, deals being reported on now for Fox houses in New Jersey, Long Island and New England in addition to the others.

A special meeting of Publix officials with Skouras was held Thursday in New York.

tainment to a discriminating patronage, and particularly in those instances where a "School and Screen" selection is to be featured, would do well to select their accompanying short reels with thoughtful care. Toward that end this Department will list each month the short subjects of outstanding educational value, or beauty, that have come to our attention.

The Wonder Trail

Educational Pictures

A camera in the hands of an artist wandering through Yosemite has given us undoubtedly the most beautiful short picture of the month. Tumbling waterfalls, their spray and turbulence seeming to fly from the screen; panoramic distances; the lace like shadows of poplar leaves on quiet waters; pines etched against the sky—all of these things are accompanied by a brilliant score of symphonic music. This picture is unforgettable.

Adventures in Africa

Vitaphone

"Into the Unknown," "The Lion Hunt," "Spears of Death," "Witch Doctor's Magic," "The Buffalo Hunt," "Dangerous Trails," "Flaming Jungles" are some of the two-reel episodes which have been produced under the supervision of Wynant D. Hubbard, the well-known authority on African wild life, author and explorer, who spent two years in Portuguese East Africa and Northern Rhodesia filming the animal life on the Dark Continent. These authentic pictures, effectively photographed, are accompanied by an interesting lecture.

Climate Chasers

Paramount

A Bruce Scenic. It takes you from the gem-like Lake Louise in its setting of snow capped mountains, to Havana with its old world beauty. These travelogues seem to cast a spell over an audience. They invariably win applause at their ending and are listed by all reviewing groups as "excellent" entertainment.

Tennis Technique

Metro Goldwyn Mayer

This is the title of one in a series of four thrilling tennis pictures featuring "Big Bill" Tilden, in which the champion tells and demonstrates how to wield a tennis racket expertly. These pictures are outstanding.

Three Dead in Explosion At Eastman Film Plant

Three men are dead, a fourth is believed mortally injured and a fifth is in a serious condition following the explosion of inflammable gasses which were being driven off in the process of film base manufacture at Kodak Park, Rochester, N. Y. Eleven others were slightly injured.

The large machine in which the explosion occurred was one of 65 turning dissolved nitrocellulose into sheet film. Production on the other machines in the building has been resumed. The structure was not seriously damaged. No explanation of the explosion has been arrived at by the Eastman executives as all possible precautions had been taken. No such serious accident has occurred at Kodak Park for 25 years despite the inflammable nature of film in process of manufacture.

HOLLYWOOD HERALD TOURNEY BEST EVER

Fourteen Ties Attest Closeness of Competition Among 230 Golfers —Tournament Is Broadcast

A field of 230 golfers—the largest group of film celebrities and executives ever to participate in a tourney—teed off in the Fifth Annual Motion Picture Golf Tournament, sponsored by The Hollywood Herald and Quigley Publications and held Sunday at the Lakeside Golf Club in Hollywood. When the dust had cleared from the battle of the fairways—and the rough—fourteen ties attested the closeness of the rivalry and the height of interest reached in the play.

Both low gross and low net were halved. Roland McKenzie and H. K. Bachelder, each with a score of 73, shared low gross honors, while Pete Smith and Bruce Rogers turned in cards of 67 for low net.

Starter Ollie Painter sent the first foursome to the tee at 8 o'clock with perfect weather to add further zest to the competition for the many prizes. The foursomes were on their way at five minute intervals after checking in with George Marshall. Not until several minutes after 1 o'clock did the last of the 230 players drive off.

Meantime a gallery of several hundred had assembled, including large numbers of feminine fans. News weekly cameramen were on the job from the start and Lewis Lewin, at the microphone for station S.T.A.R., the Voice of Hollywood, joined in the recording of the tourney in picture and sound.

Lavish praise was heard on all sides for the way the tournament was sponsored and handled.

Major prize winners were as follows:

Low gross: tie between Roland McKenzie and H. K. Bachelder with a score of 73.

Low net: tie between Pete Smith, 91-24-67, and Bruce Rogers, 85-18-67.

Actors: low gross, Al Biggs, 79.

Writers: low gross, Orville Stewart, 84.

Technical Division: low gross, Al Lebovitz, 74.

Directors: low gross, tie between George Marshall and Frank Borzage, with a score of 84.

Publicity and press Division: low gross, Jimmy Fidler, 81.

Producers and executives: low gross, tie between L. H. Buell and Grant Friel.

Exchange men and exhibitors: low gross, Don Knapp, 83.

Playoffs will be held Sunday.

EIGHT BIG CITIES LACK ZONING PLAN

completed by MOTION PICTURE HERALD. The survey reveals that in a majority of keys and important cities protection is administered haphazardly. Only nine important cities definitely have established protection schedules, and the systems in work in five of these are no more than temporary local agreements. Fourteen major cities have an arbitrarily dictated system, the terms of which are set by the theatre organization holding the balance of power. In nine of these situations is centered the most vigorous opposition to administration of protection, an opposition which not only has taken the form of disputes and protests between exhibitors but also has been extended to state legal departments in Minnesota, Wisconsin and Nebraska, and similar action is threatened in Missouri, Kansas and Ohio.

No Plan in Eight Big Cities

Eight important cities have no plan whatever, and in these centers protection is obtained by devious, haphazard methods; the policy of the exhibitors apparently being summed up in the words, "Get what you can."

It is among situations such as these that the sponsors of uniform zoning and protection systems expect to make their greatest advances. It was stated that on the inauguration of uniform plans in situations where none existed before, contracts readily could be made to include the new protection terms. In many situations where local agreements administer protection, existing contracts already provide for the eventuality of adoption of a uniform plan by including a clause which specifies that the local agreement may be supplanted by a new whenever adopted by the interested parties.

Following are the results of the HERALD'S survey on the national protection situation.

Many Exhibitors Ask Uniform Protection

ALBANY—Many exhibitors declare that there is a great need for a uniform zoning ruling as many protection demands are unjust. The zoning idea in the Albany territory now, however, appears satisfactory to a majority of exhibitors. Exhibitors regret, however, that past zoning rules were not satisfied by those responsible for them.

Atlanta Zoning Lacks Regulation

ATLANTA—Zoning failed last year when Publix refused to agree to a committee proposal. Protection is now administered without regulations. Usually, city first runs get 60 days; second runs, 30 days; subsequent runs, 15 days. A few spots get 30 days. Nearby towns and Miami present a worse situation. They first try to hold subsequents until the tourist season is over, usually accomplishing this by overbuying long protection preference to their own second-run over a competing second-run.

First Runs Are Given 30 Days at Baltimore

BALTIMORE—All first-runs have a protection period of 30 days from the first playing date unless they waive this right so that the picture can be played in neighborhood houses sooner.

The entire city is mapped out in sections with so many theatres to a section. Neighborhood theatres in sections book according to first, second and third run after first-run protection period is finished for any given picture.

The system, essentially, is arbitrary, controlled directly by Loew's.

35-Mile Protection by RKO at Birmingham

BIRMINGHAM—No zoning is effective in this territory, except that RKO gives protection in 35-mile radius. Two first-run houses are protected for 60 days in Birmingham proper; second-run houses are protected by contract terms.

New System Starts In Buffalo Area

BUFFALO—A new protection system is just being inaugurated here which gives all first-runs a uniform protection of thirty days over subsequents. The plan is purely local and, being governed by committees, may be terminated at their discretion upon a majority vote.

Double Features Problem in Chicago

CHICAGO—The protection and zoning system in effect here for years continues with but minor changes. Just a year ago, independent exhibitors turned down a uniform plan which attempted definitely to classify neighborhood and suburban houses. While the present method is not entirely satisfactory, a condition has not been reached where any crisis appears imminent. The situation is in control of Balaban & Katz and the principal grievance centers around the switching of release dates on double feature bills which assures general release houses following such ace houses as Marbro and Granada with the identical double feature programs played by them. This situation in some cases has set back general release from the eighth to the twelfth week. Chicago's system is not a uniform plan, but was evolved from purely local situations and practices.

Unsettled Status At Cincinnati

CINCINNATI—The schedule worked out and inaugurated several months ago, giving adequate protection to Cincinnati first-runs was considered satisfactory at that time, except that some of the subsequent-run exhibitors charged discrimination.

Previous protection and zoning, as covered by the hitherto effective schedule, is now virtually nil, with current availability, bookings and play dates somewhat unrestricted pending a definite revision said to be in the offing.

Independents Protest Cleveland Schedule

CLEVELAND—Cleveland first-runs get 42 days' protection; second-runs get seven days' protection from last play date. Thereafter, pictures are available to all houses without price or class distinction. Cleveland has no zoning plans now in operation. Independents are contesting the protection schedule now in work here, and only recently adopted. Their protests, however, originated with, and are directed primarily at, the recent price cuts made by Loew's.

Denver Agreement Is Not Followed

DENVER—The original zoning agreement is not being followed to the letter in Denver territory, but each exchange is following its own protection arrangement, which in most cases gives first-run houses 45 days' protection over 35-cent houses, 70 days over 25-cent theatres, 105 over 20-cent theatres, 150 over 15-cent theatres and 180 days over 10-cent theatres.

No trouble at present or looked for.

Des Moines Protection Repudiated by Allied

DES MOINES—City has 45 days' protection over second-runs; Davenport, 30 days; Cedar Rapids, 45; Waterloo, 30. Exhibitors are not advised why they are held up on pictures shown within a 30-mile radius of Publix-owned towns. No recent protests have been made, although the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa has repudiated all protection, having walked out on zoning conferences held here a year ago.

Detroit Meetings At a Standstill

DETROIT—Failure of exhibitors and distributors to get together on demands in two preliminary meetings in June resulted in no agreement. Meetings were indefinitely discontinued on advice of general counsel of all distributors to local exchange managers to refrain from any negotiations regarding protection and zoning until the Department of Justice rendered a decision on the legality of zoning agreements.

Detroit and Grand Rapids were the only Michigan cities previously zoned and their old protection schedules called for 28 days between first and second-run, then seven days between second and third, and third and fourth.

Distributor reaction is that the exhibitor now pays for protection or waives his protection for lower film price, averaging 15 to 20 per cent below normal. Distributors say the exhibitor can buy cheaper and they can afford to sell cheaper. Any certain run in any former zone is now part of each sales contract. Exchange bookers have harder work due to the necessity of revising all former charts. The consensus points to the fact that a new arrangement should work to the advantage of both parties.

28 Days Protection To W. & V. at Harrisburg

HARRISBURG—C. Floyd Hopkins, district manager for Wilmer & Vincent, controlling all but one first-run house in Harrisburg, says all producing concerns or exchanges with which his company does business give him water-tight protection of 28 days in territory for a radius of 25 miles. There has never been any trouble here in living up to this agreement. The same is true in Reading, Allentown and Altoona, where Wilmer & Vincent has theatres. In fact, Hopkins understands that not only those theatres controlled by his corporation in the medium sized cities of Pennsylvania, but those of other chains in the same cities have entirely satisfactory protection.

60-Day Protection Given at Houston

HOUSTON—Metropolitan, Loew's State, RKO Majestic, and Kirby theatres have protection of 60 days on all products. Queen theatre, a class "B" Publix house, gets 45 days. This applies to the Will Horwitz chain and all subsequent runs.

Independents Score Kansas City Victory

KANSAS CITY—Independent exhibitors have just scored a victory in forcing Fox Midland Theatres Circuit to rescind its new protection schedule for 1931-32 product and to reinstate last season's protection. A zoning plan, however, has not been restored.

HAPHAZARD SYSTEM IN MOST KEYS

Independents are holding meetings to decide whether action shall be taken to compel Fox Midland to refrain from demanding additional protection which the affiliated circuit has been obtaining in the past. Charles Burkey, president of Independent Theatre Owners, declares Shanberg has been arbitrary in demanding unreasonable protection and that while the 1930-31 schedule is generally satisfactory, Shanberg is still obtaining such protection in certain situations.

Outside of Kansas City, the situation in the territory is unchanged, the uniform zoning plan adopted last December prevailing.

Louisville Free of Zoning Controversy

LOUISVILLE—This city is entirely free of any trouble or controversy over zoning or protection. There are no large cities within a distance of 80 miles or more of Louisville.

No Uniform Memphis Plan

MEMPHIS—There is no uniform protection or zoning in this territory, according to M. A. Lightman. Parties were working on a plan last year when matters came up which forced suspension of action. Lightman says a plan will be set up soon.

It's Every Man for Himself at Milwaukee

MILWAUKEE—There is no definite zoning or protection plan for 1931-32 product here. Zoning and clearance schedule for Milwaukee distribution zone during 1930-31 selling season did not meet with the approval of all exhibitors; consequently, a policy of every man for himself is being followed during the current season. MPTO of Wisconsin declared itself at the annual convention as favoring some form of zoning and protection, but not the schedule as applied to 1930-31 product.

Groups of Wisconsin exhibitors have already appealed to the State Marketing Commission for relief from protection schedules as enforced in their localities.

Minneapolis Waits State's Decision

MINNEAPOLIS — No uniform protection or zoning system is in effect here, and there is pending before the attorney general an appeal by independent exhibitors to invalidate all protection. Meanwhile, independents make the best deal they can with exchanges.

Individual Contract Rules at New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS—Protection here is a matter of the individual contract; first-run houses such as Saengers and Loew's are getting 60 days; Orpheum RKO gets considerably less; United Theatres, chain of neighborhood houses, enjoy priority of 60 days over independents in the same territory. A protection conference several months ago broke up when the affiliated and independent exhibitors split. United Theatres demanded 60 days and independents claimed 30 days was sufficient.

Film Board Plan Working at Omaha

OMAHA—The uniform zoning plan adopted a year ago by the Omaha film board has proven satisfactory with the exception of one injunction suit filed by a Madison, Neb., exhibitor. Local neighborhoods are classed according to admissions. Thirty-five cents top admissions get pictures 38 days after first-runs; 30 cents, 42 days; 25 cents, 56 days. Small towns are zoned by their mileage from Omaha and their population; for example, towns of 15,000 to 20,000 get pictures 15 days after local first-runs.

Philadelphia Circuits Get 28-Day Protection

PHILADELPHIA—Chain houses in Philadelphia enforce 28-day protection over first-runs with a subsequent seven-day protection of leading neighborhood houses over independents. The independents do not object to the time period in the city, but are clamoring for a more systematized schedule of play dates. This is the main platform in the new zoning plan of the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware and southern Jersey, which it hopes to put across this fall. Independents state there is no trouble in getting release dates on "big" pictures as chain neighborhoods are willing to play them as soon as possible, thus speeding availability, but that difficulty is found in pictures of mediocre pull, which, however, are needed to fill programs.

28 Days Protection to Pittsburgh First-Runs

PITTSBURGH—First-run Pittsburgh theatres have 28 days' protection over city and nearby towns. Third-run theatres wait from 10 to 28 days more for picture availability. No uniform plan has been adopted.

Little Success in Portland Zoning

PORTLAND—The Film Board endeavored to unite chain and independent exhibitors in several conferences on zoning, but with little success. There are numerous conflicts between Portland independent exhibitors and other Oregon points. Fifty-six days are generally taken by first and second-runs. An additional 14 are taken by second and third-runs.

30-Day System Works at Providence

PROVIDENCE—Exhibitors find the 30-day protection arrangement on first-run films to be a workable plan and harmony prevails. In addition to giving protection to the six downtown theatres in Providence, the edict holds for Pawtucket as well.

Second-runs after the 30-day expiration are doing good business in many houses.

Richmond Movement Proves Unsuccessful

RICHMOND—A movement launched one month ago for the purpose of reaching an agreement on zoning was unsuccessful, according to W. J. Coulter, of Byrd Theatres, one of a committee endeavoring to work out the matter.

27-Day Clause for Downtown Rochester

ROCHESTER—Downtown theatres are protected under a 27-day zoning clause covering territory within 30 miles. The provision includes Canandaigua and Batavia, the two biggest towns in western New York in Buffalo and Rochester territory.

90 and 60 Days At San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO—Big pictures get 90 and 60 days' protection. Others down to 15 days. This applies to the city only, as there is no protection outside San Antonio.

Principles of Plan Used at San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO—Zoning and protection in the San Francisco territory is based upon admission price and run. The basic principles of the uniform zoning plan adopted last fall are generally followed and considered fair by exhibitors and distributors. No zoning meetings are being held locally.

There's No Zoning In Pacific Northwest

SEATTLE—There is no zoning in the Pacific Northwest territory. A majority of Seattle exchanges are handling protection on the same basis as last season; namely, 45 to 60 days' clearance for neighborhood and suburban theatres, and a maximum two-weeks' clearance for small towns. There are no prospects for adoption of zoning or a change in protection this season.

St. Louis First-Runs Have 28-Day Priority

ST. LOUIS—First-runs have 28 days' protection. Capitol, downtown, has 14 days over any subsequent run house in that zone, charging 15 cents admission, and 35 days if such house runs double feature programs, and 61 days' protection over all 10-cent houses. In other zones of St. Louis, the second-run houses of St. Louis Amusement Circuit have 14 days' protection over all other theatres in their respective zones. Out in the territory, the key theatres have from 7 to 14 days' protection over competing houses, including nearby towns. There has been virtually no opposition to the St. Louis plan.

Canadians Await Dominion Action

TORONTO—Protection and zoning is very much in the limelight in Canada as the result of condemnation of current procedure by Peter White in his report to the Canadian Government. Provincial governments are studying the report with a view to legal action and promise has been made that protection will be regulated by legislation among other steps. The investigation brought out that first-run houses have protection of from 28 days to six months. In the meantime, exchanges and theatre chains are standing pat.

No Zoning Plan Used at Tampa

TAMPA—There is no plan of zoning or protection in effect here. Sparks circuit controls the territory and obtains virtually whatever protection it demands. Subsequent-runs take pictures whenever the exchanges release them.

No Distinctive Wilmington Plan

WILMINGTON—Apparently there is no distinctive zoning of any of the theatres in this territory, which is listed under Philadelphia and subject to the zoning and protection in force there.

M-G-M in this section, however, invokes Washington, D. C., zoning and protection regulations.

National First-Run Combine Is Hanson Plan for Canada

Declaration that Associated Exhibitors, Ltd. of Canada will be a national first-run theatre organization prepared to assist members with expansion of theatre activities was made by Oscar Hanson, general manager, at a meeting attended by 75 Ontario independent exhibitors at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, late this week. Announcement of policy and plans of the organization by Ernest Marks, president, preceded Hanson's declaration.

"We will have first-run member theatres in every exchange center in Canada," Hanson told the meeting, "and we will be prepared to offer assistance to any member who wants to branch out. Already there is a tentative organization in three provinces and additional groups have asked assistance from us in organizing."

Revealing the purposes of the organization, Hanson added that the objective of Associated was to provide independents with all of the operation advantages of circuits.

Hanson also disclosed that Associated Exhibitors, Ltd. has effected a tie up with equipment dealers for cooperative buying-ing, and that an advertising service has been retained to prepare copy for member theatres.

An arrangement has been made with Independent Theatre Owners of Michigan for an interchange of information and ideas.

Katz Promotes 11 Chiefs In South

Sam Katz of Publix has made 11 executive promotions in the central and southern territories as the result of a reorganization, in order to bring about more intensive executive supervision.

R. J. O'Donnell, in charge of the Saenger and Southwest divisions, takes over, in addition, the southern de luxe division. J. J. Friedl, division manager under O'Donnell, who has had Dallas, San Antonio, Houston and New Orleans, has also taken over Fort Worth, Galveston and Austin.

Harry Katz, director of the Great States Indiana division, will have added to his territory the towns of Youngstown, Steubenville, Lorain and Marion in Ohio and Wheeling, W. Va. Henry Stickelmaier division manager, will act as field supervisor.

L. J. Schneider, Southwest division director, has been transferred to the home office and succeeded by William K. Jenkins, former manager of the Saenger division. Jenkins, under O'Donnell, will headquarter at Dallas. W. E. Paschall, returning to Publix, after association with Dent Theatres, is division manager under Jenkins.

Howard W. McCoy, district manager of the tri-state division, succeeds Jenkins, while M. C. Hughes is transferred from the New Orleans realty department, to succeed McCoy, and J. J. Fitzgerald, of the home offices, goes to New Orleans in charge of all real estate operations in the Southeast. The office now is a district office responsible to New York. A. B. Heston becomes district manager of Southwest realty with headquarters at Dallas. Toledo has been transferred to the Chicago-Detroit division and de luxe houses in New Haven and Boston to Division A under Milt Feld.

Sympathy!

Printers of the typographical union of Lincoln, Neb., to the number of 175, have instituted a sympathy measure with local projectionists. A boycott has been declared by the printers on all six theatres of the Lincoln Theatre Corporation, which operates open shop. Any printer seen attending any of the six houses, will be fined $25. An orchestra of 16 has also walked out of the Stuart, one of the group, because of the firm's difficulties with projectionists.

Break with Unions Brings Court Order

Difficulties with union employees reached the acute stage in two situations this week.

At Denver, District Judge E. V. Holland has granted Fox Colorado Theatre Company, owners of the Mayan, Isis, Oriental and Egyptian, a restraining order prohibiting the unions from striking or paying strike benefits. The difficulty started when a stagehand employed by the Mayan was discharged for economy reasons, Fox claiming that the stagehands were discriminating against the management by forcing it to hire a man to operate the curtain.

All employees in the 23 independent suburban theatres of Kansas City having union operators were given two weeks' notice on Wednesday, in the newest development there in the attempt of exhibitors to obtain a one-man booth and reduction of operators' wages. This followed action of M. B. Shanberg, head of Fox Midland Theatres, in giving two weeks' notice to projectionists at the ten Kansas City suburban Fox houses.

Thompson Appointment at Trans Lux Ends Smith Report

Appointment this week of Major Leslie E. Thompson as general manager of Trans Lux Pictures Corporation, operating automatic turnstile newsreel theatres, is understood to have simultaneously silenced reports of Courtland Smith's resignation. Smith, reports have it, will continue with Trans Lux, without salary. He had previously been reported out of Trans Lux on numerous occasions.

Smith, as chief of Pathe News, continues staff reductions in that organization. Walter Scott, chief cameraman, is the latest dismissal. Major Thompson comes from RKO, where he had been representative on the circuit's labor committee.

Paramount Retires Another $800,000 of Debentures

Paramount Publix on Thursday delivered to Chase National Bank, as trustee, $800,000 par value of its 6% sinking fund debentures for cancellation and retirement. These bonds were delivered to comply with the sinking fund provision which requires the retirement of $800,000 par value of these bonds on October 1st of each year. This leaves outstanding $12,800,000 of these bonds from an original issue of $16,000,000.

Managers Are Not Wooden Indians, Feist Tells Vincent

The meeting of representatives of exhibitors protesting M-G-M's proposed percentage booking system, with Felix Feist, general sales manager of the distributing company, was postponed from Thursday of this week until Friday.

On Monday, Walter Vincent, chairman of the Continuing Committee named at the "National M-G-M Protest" conference in New York issued the first official statement.

In outlining the work of the committee up to and including September 14, Vincent, who serves on the committee with Nathan Yamins, A. Levy, Pete Wood, Lew Pizor, M. A. Lightman, Charles O'Reilly and J. J. Harwood, stated:

"The Continuing Committee named by the recent conference on Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales policy and other practices of producers felt inimical to the interests of the independent theatre operators, met Mr. Felix Feist, in charge of distribution for M-G-M, at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor September 2.

"Mr. Feist very clearly stated the policy of his company; corrected what he thought were some false impressions of the company's said policy and reviewed in general the plans that led up to its adoption. He stated that if they were to alter same it would be necessary to immediately get in touch with Mr. Mayer in Hollywood and inform him that on account of a revised sales policy it would be necessary to revise their program as the new sales policy was based upon same.

"He informed the committee that his company felt they could not make pictures that would click at the box office unless they went forward with their ambitious plans. He stated that their branch sales managers were not a lot of wooden Indians and that they would consider each buyer's problem on its merits. He extended through the committee an invitation to all theatre owners who had a justifiable complaint to present their case and he felt that they would reach an understanding that would eventuate in a contract. He further stated that he was prepared to justify any clauses in the contract that theatre owners felt were not fair.

"The committee begs to announce that it will continue to function and will call meetings from time to time in an endeavor to reach better understandings with producers, and to better in every possible way the situation of the independent theatre owner."

The Vincent statement covered old ground and verified the non-existence of definite headway up to its issuance.

Contrary to complaints voiced at the conference of exhibitors in New York two weeks ago, it was revealed at the recent Minneapolis convention of Allied members that the company has not consistently adhered to a fast and set rule concerning percentage booking on a 20 to 40 per cent basis, but many owners in the six Northwest states had bought on a flat rental.

Action pro and con for M-G-M's percentage sales policies was taken earlier in the week by two state exhibitor associations. The resolution against booking pictures on a percentage basis from Metro and Paramount, passed by the M. P. T. O. of Maryland, headed by Charles Nolte, on June 11, was withdrawn by that organization.

At Detroit, the Allied Michigan exhibitors' association decided to refrain from buying M-G-M until the percentage tilt is clarified. It was said that only 32 contracts out of a total of 385 Michigan towns had been closed on new M-G-M product.

CIRCUIT IN EAST BRINGS RETURN OF WHOLESALE DOUBLE BILL POLICY

Donahue & Coe to Handle Fox Ads

A two-year contract for the handling of all Fox Film advertising has been closed with Donahue & Coe, Inc., downtown New York financial agency, formerly known as Donahue, Coe & Mayer. The agency will also handle all advertising of Utilities, Power & Light Corp., a Harley Clarke property. The advertising accounts of none of the other Clarke interests are included in the agreement, according to Glenn Griswold, vice-president and director of public relations of Fox, who negotiated the contract.

The Donahue, Coe & Mayer agency was reorganized for the handling of the Clarke accounts. Mayer's interest was purchased by Edwin Churchill, formerly Fox contact man with the Paul Cornell Advertising Agency, and the firm's name changed to Donahue & Coe, Inc. Churchill becomes vice-president of the reorganized agency. An uptown office to handle the new accounts has been opened at 1790 Broadway.

Rinzler & Frisch Refuses To Join in Ban

150 N. Y. Independents Forced to Return to Doubles After 41 R&F Houses Continue Policy

Double featuring may again become a sore spot in the structure of national exhibition. Refusal of Rinzler & Frisch, most powerful independent circuit group in New York, to join other independents in discontinuing wholesale double bills, already has forced owners of 150 houses in Brooklyn, Queens and other Long Island sections of Metropolitan New York to return to this policy after all had agreed to discontinue doubles, except on one day weekly, beginning with the fall season.

Independents in the New York territory, which represents 14 per cent of the theatre buying power of the entire country, are up in arms over the double feature stand taken by R & F., and it is believed by many that the movement will gain sufficient momentum as to again establish doubles on a wholesale basis throughout the East, possibly spreading westward.

The return follows several months of hectic battling by competive national circuit and independent operators in practically every key throughout the country, and comes at a time when all believed the socalled "evil" had been stamped out, at least as a consistent policy nationally.

With the buying of practically every product available, except MGM, operators of the newly created string of 41 Rinzler & Frisch houses intend to double feature everything except the very rare outstanding production. Even such pictures as "Public Defender," "Night Angel" and "Smart Money," considered sufficiently strong for a single play, will be doubled. At least 300 features are known to have been purchased already by R & F.

Just why the circuit, which was built up within a few weeks on theatre purchases from Fox, should adopt this policy has caused mystification to independents in New York, who are aware that the majority of R & F theatres are operating on a paying basis. Fox had intended discontinuance of the policy at the same houses if it continued their operation. At one particular R & F house in Brooklyn where doubles will be the steady policy, the property has been netting $1,800 and $3,000 weekly.

The movement immediately brought about a double bill arrangement throughout Queens and Brooklyn, where the group operates in practically every neighborhood.

That exchanges in New York are fully aware of the policy was learned from contracts made with them. Instead of agreeing to a 20 per cent take on percentage playings, the distributors are known to have inserted a clause which gives them only 10 per cent when the picture is doubled with another.

Gang Film Is Dead: Pettijohn to Solons

A public which does not want any more gangster films has decreed an end of their production, C. C. Pettijohn, Film Board chief, told a joint committee of the New York senate and assembly at Albany this week, at a public hearing on the Crawford bill, passage of which would impose a fine of from $500 to $5,000 for production or exhibition of gangster pictures in New York.

"So-called gangster pictures are fading from the screen and themes based primarily on gangster activities are now taboo," Pettijohn told the legislators. "This is particularly so with reference to future plans of the members of our association.

"Regardless of this attitude, however," he continued, "gangster pictures are at an end of their own weight, and because the public does not want them."

Pettijohn counseled the legislators that the Crawford bill, aimed specifically at gangster pictures, is superfluous for this reason, and, if enacted, would work a hardship on producers not intended by the framers of the bill.

Canon William Chase, Brooklyn reformer, and several welfare workers appeared in behalf of the bill, which was taken under advisement by the committee.

RKO Pathe Wins In Injunction Suit

RKO Pathe has again been upheld in its contention that it is not responsible for contractual obligations of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in a decision handed down by Judge Heath in supreme court, Otsego County, New York.

The Smalley Theatres of Binghamton asked an injunction against RKO Pathe Pictures, Inc., RKO Pathe Distributing Corporation, Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Radio-Keith-Orpheum. The injunction was denied. A similar case in Buffalo resulted in a like decision a few months ago.

Adventures of Wallingford

Comedy

In this picture M-G-M has another box office hit. The story is interesting, well told and well directed by Sam Wood. William Haines, in a straighter characterization than usual, shows the effects of recent coaching and gives a good performance even though he and Ernest Torrence as Blackie Daw do not seem exactly true to the Chester characters.

The performances of Torrence and Leila Hyams both are excellent but Jimmie Durante almost steals the picture. This has lots of good comedy and bright dialogue.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Directed by Sam Wood. From the original novel by George Randolph Chester. Release date, October 10, 1931.

My Sin

(Paramount)

Drama

The able Fredric March and the rather charming Tallulah Bankhead play the leads in this drama of the redemption of two people who have fallen by the wayside, through a mutual love and faith.

The scene opens in a cafe in Panama, where March is a nondescript and drunken shadow of the brilliant lawyer we are given to understand he was before he arrived at the semi-tropical center. Miss Bankhead is the hostess in the same cafe, whose prospects are anything but bright and whose courage has all but failed completely.

Suddenly confronted with the husband who had taken her savings regularly, she shoots him after a struggle. March takes the case after respectable lawyers had refused and wins an acquittal. He saves her from committing suicide and their pact is made, to go their separate ways and make a success of life.

The scene shifts to fashionable New York, where Miss Bankhead, a successful interior decorator, is engaged to marry the scion of a wealthy family. March arrives in New York in the course of his successful career in the oil business, and insists that Tallulah reveal her past to her fiance. She refuses, and March leaves. At a dinner at the home of the fiance, appears the latter's uncle, who recognizes the girl, having seen her in the Panama cafe. Through March, he reveals the truth and the engagement is broken.

March finally reveals his feeling for the girl he had set upon the right path, and who had been instrumental in doing likewise for him, and the film concludes in the not unexpected manner of the reconciliation of the two.

The audience at the New York Paramount gave every evidence of enjoyment during the showing of the film. The story, admittedly not a new theme, was nevertheless well handled in the adaptation and direction of George Abbott, comment indicated, and particular praise was accorded the work of March and Miss Bankhead. The balance of the cast was termed satisfactory.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by George Abbott. Adaptation by George Abbott. Screen play by Owen Davis and Adelaide Heilbron. From a story by Fred Jackson. Photography, George Folsey. Release date, September 26, 1931. Running time, 78 minutes.

Student's Song of Heidelberg

(Ufa)

Romance

Opening the fall season at New York's exclusively German language theatre, the Cosmopolitan, Ufa offers "Ein Burschlied Aus Heidelberg," a pleasant and melodiously developed romance set in Germany's old university center, Heidelberg.

The almost wholly German audience seemed to enjoy the film most thoroughly, entering completely into the gay, carefree life of the students, which forms the background, particularly effective from the scenic standpoint, for the successful love affair of the German-American visitor to Heidelberg, scene of her father's school days, and the young student.

Willy Forst, German film and musical comedy star, plays the student and Betty Bird, attractive rising star in German film circles, the girl of his choice. Hans Brausewetter is the student rival for the hand of the girl. Decidedly favorable comment was accorded the work of the principals, and that of Ida Wuest, as the landlady of the house in which the girl boards.

Dialogue throughout was clever and numerous humorous passages were particularly enjoyed by the German audience. Musical numbers are effective as rendered by Forst and Miss Bird, and the students' choruses were found especially effective.

The two students fall in love with the girl, and when Brausewetter composes a ditty reflecting upon the successful fellow-student and the girl, the latter, incensed, hits him, which in the German student code, means a saber duel. Hearing of the affair, the girl attempts to prevent it, reaches the student's room, and in order to save her, he fails to respond to his seconds' call. He is about to forfeit when the girl's father arrives, hears the circumstances, and arranges that the duel take place, saving the honor of the student, and the two are, as expected, happy with each other at the conclusion.

Direction was commented upon as a nice treatment of a light romantic theme, with obviously authentic portrayal of the Heidelberg student life lending much to the effectiveness of the film as a whole.

Produced by Ufa. Directed by Karl Hartl. Story and adaptation by Ernst Neubach, Hans Wilhelm. Cameraman, Karl Hoffman. Music by Hans May.

Western

This screen adaptation of the well known Zane Grey western novel, was accorded a cordial reception at a recent Coast showing, with the work of George O'Brien and Marguerite Churchill in the leads and that of the balance of the cast being favorably received.

It is a true western effort, filled with action and romance, and in the opinion of many present, well done. O'Brien plays Lassiter, colorful, hard shooting hero and Miss Churchill makes an attractive sweetheart for him. Noah Beery, Stanley Fields and Frank McGlynn, Jr., were most satisfactory bad men and Yvonne Pelletier and James Todd pleased in romantic parts.

O'Brien, searching for a long lost sister, arrives at Miss Churchill's ranch, and finding her persecuted by Beery and his outlaw gang, rushes to the rescue. He recovers stolen cattle after several running gun fights, and rescues two children held by the outlaws. He learns the children are daughters of the lost sister, and had been kidnappped from the father by Fields.

In a court battle, O'Brien shoots Beery and makes good his escape with Miss Churchill for the "happy" conclusion. The direction of Hamilton MacFadden was well received.

Produced and distributed by Fox. From the original story by Zane Grey. Directed by Hamilton MacFadden. Adaptation by John F. Goodrich. Continuity and dialogue by Phillip Klein and Barry Conners. Photographed by George Schneiderman. Release date, October 18, 1931.

The Shadow Between

British International

Domestic Drama

Once again the Elstree scissors must have been mislaid, for with about a thousand feet wisely weeded out of this one, Britain might stand a chance of getting right into the American market.

Dion Titheradge's play would have been very strong material in the hands of almost any first-rate American director. So it might in the hands of the British Norman Walker, who knows how to make a workmanlike picture. But his work has been cut atrociously badly—or not at all. Story is of a jolly straight girl, daughter of a country parson, who marries a young waster. After a gay two years travelling the world, she finds herself the widow of a suicide who had reached the end of his financial resources. She returns to the Vicarage. The stuffy atmosphere plus her father's transparent hypocrisy gets her down. She accepts the offer of a weird type of middle-aged bachelor and they start on a kind of companionate marriage; recognized by the church, but not in the bed-chamber.

This fellow is white all through, when the business in which his father has placed him, crashes rather badly, he is caught for something irregular, in reality the responsibility of his old father and a crooked partner, and goes to gaol. Before going he vows that he can never return to his wife, although by this time they have fallen heavily in love, because of the "shadow between"—they would not be able to start equal. While he is in gaol, the young wife works at a tea shop, is wrongly suspected of theft, and gladly goes to gaol just to "get equal" with her husband. After her release, and just as she is awaiting the release of her husband, she is almost drawn into a further police case, through a robbery performed by a girl crook who used to work with her in the tea shop. The girl crook happens to have been the mistress of the imprisoned husband's partner and knows therefore that he was not to blame for the crooked finance of the company. She also happens to have been responsible for stealing the cash for which the wife went to prison. Husband and wife are therefore free again—to start equal, and each one morally vindicated in the eyes of the other.

At the outset there is far too much footage to establish the girl's early misfortunes with her first husband. Its only justification is that it shows Monte Carlo and fine exterior scenes, which in reality is no justification at all. Acting through this sequence is also rather bad. Later things warm up and the girl's revolt against her humbug of a father starts some real histrionics. Things from that point certainly keep going, until near the end, when rather too much insistence is laid upon the "come-clean" of the girl crook. Insistence costs footage, and as it is pretty obvious by this time that the happy ending is only waiting just around the corner, interest is apt to sag.

Throughout the film there is some good acting by Godfrey Tearle as the honest John company director. Titheridge and not Tearle was to blame for the fact that a husband who lived for such a time with a woman he loved and had married, never broke that promise to be "just friends." And, after all, that man is too improbable even for the movies. Kathleen O'Regan as the wife gives a performance full of power: she ought to be a big name in the right hands. At times she looks like Claudette Colbert and acts so, too; at others the cameras and recorders conspire to make her look like a guilty shadow, with a voice like a penny mouth organ. Among this cast, too, we have the first Ann Casson, daughter of the famous Sybil Thorndike. She has only a small part, but that's enough to show that she has far to go to catch her mother. The first step will have to be the acquisition of a better voice and an appearance of maturity. British International is banking on her as one of the stars they are setting out to make. Starting with an illustrious mother, Ann Casson will still need a good deal of training. Supporting players are mainly fair, like the chances of the film in America, provided B. I. P. will use those scissors.

Produced by British International Pictures. Directed by Norman Walker. Photography by Claude Friese-Greene. Recorded on R.C.A. Film editor, S. Simmonds. Scenario, Norman Walker. Running time, 88 minutes.

I Like Your Nerve

(First National)

Light Comedy Drama

There is something of the smooth-muscled agility of the father in the actions of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., who has his second starring vehicle in "I Like Your Nerve," a light comedy drama with principalities in Central America as the locales of the story. Loretta Young plays opposite him in this, their fourth appearance together on the screen.

The story, by Roland Pertwee, English novelist and playwright, who also did the dialogue, does have its moments of drama but throughout runs a vein of light treatment that never permits the dramatic elements to become particularly ominous. Even in kidnaping and guard-running scenes there is more of the debonair dash of the William Haines type than the spectacular and climactic seriousness of Doug Fairbanks, Sr. That is accomplished in the story itself, which moves along gaily and light-heartedly, the star finding himself in a somewhat different type of role.

Larry O'Brien (Fairbanks) gets out from under the wing of a stern mama when a crystal gazer attacks his inferiority complex and sends him to Central America for love and adventure. Diane Forsythe (Miss Young), stepdaughter of the minister of finance, drives past and romance comes into its own. He discovers that Clive Lattimer (Edmund Breon), elderly roue, has arranged to pay the shortage in the accounts of Pacheco, the stepfather, for Diane's hand.

Pacheco and Lattimer conspire to have Diane kidnaped in order to keep Larry away from her until the wedding. Larry bribes one of the group and kidnaps her from the kidnapers. He holds her for "ransom," disguises his voice in phoning Pacheco, plays Lattimer against Pacheco, arouses a delegation of citizens to demand that Lattimer pay the ransom. Larry turns the money over to Pacheco, squaring his accounts. And with all the leverage he now has, Larry convinces Pacheco that Diane really should be wed to Larry and not Lattimer.

Almost A Divorce

W and F (Gaumont-British)

Light Marital Comedy

Although the comedy introduced in this one by the two bright boys of the British screen, Sydney Howard and Nelson Keys, is enough to produce a riot in the average English theatre, it is probable that American audiences will regard the humor as too insipid. Story concerns two bosom pals: one married, the other more fortunate, and both well in love with liquor.

Wife of the one (Richard Leighton) objects violently to his chum Mackintosh, and quits home as a result. Just as a reconciliation is about to be effected by the wife's maiden aunt Mackintosh introduces a young thing of easy habits, and complications fall thick and fast. There ensues almost everything that could overtake an unhappy husband until the final straightening up sees happiness where there had been "almost divorce."

A thin story with plenty of mild fun well put over by Howard and Keys. Apart from these two there is little excuse for the film at all. Kay Hammond as the young girl who nearly puts the marital fat into the fire shows possibilities, though on this showing she will be lucky if British producers do not make her a prostitute for the rest of her celluloid life.

Why the hubby didn't let that divorce develop one may not ask, but Margery Binner as the wife certainly failed to provide a sane reason. This is just another of those flippy little films which British and Dominions seems to concentrate upon these days. It is odd that Herbert Wilcox, production director, was the first director to think of promising films built on famous historical characters of Great Britain, Drake, the Pilgrim Fathers, and so on, and yet still goes on turning out canned stage farces. America will probably be less thrilled with this than with the most unambitious picture of Drake, provided Wilcox made any use of its possibilities at all. However, here it is, just a few laughs.

Dangerous Trails

Warner Brothers

Excellent

"Dangerous Trails," ninth of the "Adventures in Africa," starts out with the action scarcely supporting the title, but this is more than balanced by the beautiful scenery depicted, the shots of the changing shoreline from the dugout canoe being particularly engaging. These views are possibly the most interesting to date in the series. Then comes action, with the showing of hippopotami and crocodiles, one closeup of the blinking eye of a crocodile having a thrill all its own. Considerable footage is given to a fire consuming the expedition's base, footage which might better have been given to other types of action more illustrative of the locale, as flames, after all are the same whether in Africa or America. Nevertheless, "Dangerous Trails" is one of the most interest-holding of the series of pictures supervised by Wynant D. Hubbard.—Running time, 15 minutes.

SEVERAL PLANS FOR JOB RELIEF STUDIED

ery. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and its units pledge to join hands most willingly with other exhibitor organizations and other branches of the industry to aid in every possible way this vital undertaking."

Abram F. Myers also expressed the idea of unanimity of effort: "The motion picture industry contains many divergent and conflicting interests which have not always worked in harmony; but in the present undertaking all differences have been laid aside and the representatives of all branches, from the mightiest producers to the smallest independent theatres, are proceeding with complete unanimity."

The members of the original planning committee, which met in three days of almost continuous session, included:

Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, M. A. Lightman, president of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Walter Vincent, Wilmer and Vincent Theatre Circuit; George Akerson, Paramount Publix; Claude C. Ezell, Warner; Charles Rosenzweig, RKO Distributing Corporation; Courtland Smith, Pathe News; Edward Finney, United Artists; H. J. Yates, Consolidated Film Laboratories; Jack Alicoate, Film Daily.

In the production center on the Coast, unemployed should find definite relief if a new plan of operation for the Motion Picture Relief Fund materializes as expected. It is the work of Mary Pickford, Bebe Daniels, Conrad Nagel, Mrs. Fitzmaurice and Fred W. Beetson and, in the nature of insurance, calls for the voluntary pledge of every member of the industry of one-half of one per cent of his salary. No definite action, however, has yet been taken, though a favorable result is anticipated.

Among the plans which have been submitted to the planning committee are the "Five Friends Plan" of the Utilities Power & Light Corporation, one of the interests of Harley L. Clarke of Fox, and one from Consolidated Film Industries, of which Herbert J. Yates is president.

Groups of Five Proposed

The first of these, said to have been found of real practical value during the winter of 1930-31, embodies fundamentally the formation among the employees of any organization, of groups of five individuals who will work each as a single unit. Each group should contain, under the plan, some who are able to spare a certain amount of money and others who cannot afford monetary contributions, but who have time to spare. Each group is provided with the name of a worthy family, one actually suffering from the effects of unemployment, and dedicates its services to procuring employment for any potential wage earners in the family as a means of overcoming the hardships of the family. The group persists in its effort until employment is found.

The members of the various groups are guided by a central committee, according to the plan, which organizes and delegates a leader for each group. Through this committee's contacts with various charitable organizations, the groups are contacted with families in need of assistance. It also assists the groups in preparing entertainments and other means of raising funds, and acts as a clearing house for various articles of living necessity which are contributed by outside sources. The friendly spirit in which the work is done, leading to the maintenance of self-respect and morale, is claimed as a cardinal advantage of this plan.

Increase of Employees Suggested

The suggestion prepared by Consolidated Film Industries and offered to the planning committee for consideration, is to the effect that the motion picture industry, during the six months period beginning October 1, 1931, and ending April 1, 1932, "shall increase and maintain an organization of employees 10 per cent in excess of the number each company employed on September 1, 1931."

To make the plan effective, at no cost to the company, it is suggested that each employee whose salary is $5,000 a year or over accept a reduction of 5 or 10 per cent to continue throughout the six months. It is further proposed, in the event of the adoption of such a plan, that the president of each company address a letter to all present employees, assuring them of steady employment throughout the winter, emphasizing the need of loyalty and confidence in the future of the industry and business in general.

Newsreel Talks Proposed

Publicity for the proposal might, it is suggested, be enhanced by the various newsreels, each of which would include a talk by a leading industrialist of the country, the preparation of these reels being entirely a matter of voluntary contribution on the part of various organizations. The radio and newspapers are, of course, additional publicity measures proposed.

America As Seen By British Editor

tears or laughter. It has little interest in the morbidly sensational, but a hearty welcome for comedy and sentiment, and a never quenched appetite for the adventurous. Enthusiasm and partisanship for stars is still prevalent, but the days of idolatry have gone for good. Today, a star must deliver the goods or be forgotten in about the course of two pictures. Certain brands of films have almost as keen a public as the players themselves, due in every case to a high and consistent standard of entertainment.

American companies who are producing or intend to produce quota pictures in England have a difficult task, but one which can easily redound to the credit and profit of both countries. Our producers, probably because of their restricted market, do not build stars—a short sighted if quite understandable policy. American companies can score profitably along these lines and yet produce far less expensively than at Hollywood. Such U. S. companies, by a cooperative policy in regard to British quota pictures, can not only conserve her English speaking markets but substantiate her oft-repeated assertion that she welcomes British pictures.

Must Reduce Dialogue

Language differences present a greater problem in other countries, but reduction of dialogue to essentials will reduce those barriers to a surmountable minimum. There is no time to be lost, however, if success is to result.

The exhibitor in Britain as here, has his periods of despondency. No matter how many meetings take place, how much work is accomplished by exhibitor organizations, this atmosphere, it appears will remain between film buyer and seller. But it can be denuded by fair dealing on both sides.

British exhibitors are in no way behind their American cousins in the conduct of their theatres, but their regrettable use of the double feature program is causing trouble and anxiety. Three-hour programs are common. The public has come to expect them. A reversion to the single feature program must come, as it did in the U. S., but it will prove costly and slow. Even to hope for an agreement between exhibitors is futile, but the general shortage of product this season may prove effective by forcing a showdown. And if films, being fewer, are not better, it is easy to predict the effect on the box-office!

Urges Return of Music

Music must come back in one form or another, but not necessarily through musical comedy—a form of entertainment which, while generally popular, easily proves too syrupy a diet. Much more could be made of the world's great music than rudely concocted shorts.

And speaking of shorts, their declining quality is perturbing British exhibitors seriously. Travel, educational and cartoon subjects of exceptional merit abound, but the comedy is conspicuous by its lack of laughter-making potentialities. With few, and those outstanding exceptions, comedy shorts are either vulgar or dully unamusing. And as America has practically a monopoly of this field, there is need for immediate improvement. Distributors complain that exhibitors will not pay enough for shorts and exhibitors state that features cost so much that shorts ought to be thrown in. Nevertheless, no one has heard either of those arguments applied to those shorts of unusually high quality!

That the American industry is already setting its house in order is indicated by the decided improvement in the early season offerings. Cooperation is the cornerstone of success, and between English speaking countries is a necessity today. In this connection, I wish to pay tribute to those American gentlemen in whose clever and diplomatic hands rests the conduct of their companies' affairs in the British Isles. Their appreciation of the peculiar difficulties that beset the British trade and of national prejudices is too well known to need repetition—their work and influence can prove of immeasurable benefit in today's crisis.

Good pictures are the unanswerable solution to the slump, but international cooperation is the key to permanent prosperity.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Box office grosses from theatres in 29 cities over the country for the current week indicated a continuation of the upward trend in receipts which has definitely characterized the reports of the past several weeks. The total gross receipts from the 29 cities for the current week reached $2,318,629. Three new lows were recorded as compared with one last week, and one new high figure was established, at the Warner in San Francisco, where "The Star Witness" played to a week's total of $5,100. Last week, also, one new high was recorded in the Motion Picture Herald compilation of theatre receipts.

IT'S A PLEASURE

to publicize the product of Action Pictures—newest addition to the ranks of independent producers—along comes "The Sky Spider"—first of 24 features which Action Pictures will make this season—immediately the trade and newspaper critics relieve Action Pictures' press agent of the necessity for devising new ways of saying "Great" and "Marvelous"—shrewd picture judge Red Kann says "The 'Sky Spider' marks an auspicious start for the new company"—that's better than "Great" or "Marvelous"—Regina Crewe in the New York American states—"It Will Be Nicely Received"—thanks Regina—Phil M. Daily considers "The Sky Spider" a "Very Entertaining Yarn"—and Irene (Star) Thirer reviewing for New York's Daily News waxes enthusiastic writing "The 'Sky Spider' Crashes Through Like Nobody's Business"—a blurb like that from a press agent would be regarded as so much "hooey"—

and now—"Chinatown After Dark"—second Action Pictures production—will give the critics another opportunity to lighten the press agent's burden—"Chinatown" has a swell cast—Harold Lloyd's leading lady Barbara Kent—handsome, manly Rex Lease—gorgeous Carmel Myers—and the stage and screen vet Edmund Breese—it shouldn't be hard praising a picture with that cast—especially with Ralph M. Like at the production helm—Ralph is the Big Shot at the production studios of Action Pictures—

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

SOMEONE once cracked wise and remarked that, "It is the experience of politicians that they win their elections on their platforms and lose them on their achievements." That someone might have said the same thing about a lot of managers whom we have met in our travels.

Yes sir. You'll always find a large quota of "great" guys by merely asking them about themselves. Good? Sure they're good. They'll tell you how they can take a white elephant and turn it into a gold mine. Shades of Houdini! And promises? Hot dogs! They could promise you anything under the sun. But can they deliver? Well, that's a horse with another tail.

Personally, I'm always afraid of those birds who are long on promises. Give me the conservative man every time. He'll probably exceed your fondest expectations. He may not "win his election on promises," but he will never lose it on poor achievements.

And while on the subject, the men who do the hiring would be better off if they did not look for miracles themselves. If a man is worth hiring, he's certainly worth sufficient time to prove his ability. But he can only do that after he's had a chance to size up the situation.

Doctoring a "sick" theatre does not call for powerful stimulants. A slow acting, but good tonic will produce the healthiest results. Any medical man will tell you that powerful stimulants pep up the patient, but are an awful strain on the heart after the effects have worn off.

Every time one of the companies run a contest, we generally find the winners are Club members. Now we're wondering whether the "Politics" contest will produce the same results. We'll be watching for the answer as soon as the announcement is made. If this contest accomplished nothing else, it definitely proved that there were many new slants to exploitation. All the boys need is the right kind of picture to go out and sell.

Half the time when we start off on some slant or other, we stop for fear it might sound too much like sermonizing. Preaching is not in our line. If it ever sounds that way it's because you want to call it that. But truthfully, these little chats are just "chats," nothing else.

Which leads us to suggest that you try to get away from the idea that you are working for someone else. You're not. You are working for yourself, but someone else is paying you to do so. Let that sink in deep under your skin.

Just what are we all working for? The salary at the end of the week? I think not. Let's all agree that we are plugging our damndest for some sort of a future. Of course the salary is important too, you can never settle your bills with promises of the future. But your greatest efforts are aimed at advancement, bringing with it increased income, security from worry and, most important of all, the chance to save against the time when you won't want to work or perhaps will not be able to.

Sweep those cobwebs out of your brain and sell yourself completely on the idea that you are working for no one but yourself. If your efforts meet with success, it's your own future that will benefit the most. . . .

Our recent "betrayal" of the Racine (Wis.) fiasco in theatre operation brought more reaction than we anticipated. One in particular appealed to us. A showman who had to pick up his family and move them five times in the course of a year. Had to enroll his youngster in five different schools during one school year.

And circuits want their managers to be contented. Applesauce. If they would only realize the injustice of switching men around they could remedy the greatest evil in the show business today.

What prompts these changes? In the case of the showman referred to here, he was lucky to have had a great run of pictures and his house was clicking to big profits. So the boss ups and tells him that they need a "good man" at the Blah-Blah Theatre in Offusville. So as a fitting (?) reward for the big business he was doing, he was transferred to Offusville, with a pat on the back and some baloney to soothe his family's feelings. And the punishment was repeated five times in a year. What in hell did they care about this man's family, his youngster's schooling, the friends they made, or the ties which bound them to their home? Home? Pardon us, with the help of many circuit men there are no such things as homes any more.

Father, who art in Heaven; listen to the fervent prayer of an unworthy soul. Show them (the bosses) the error of their ways, light their paths so that they may walk in the sunshine and not in the shadows; and teach them, above all, Thy golden rule, to do unto others as they would have others do unto them. Amen.

Hermann Put Over Several Excellent Exploitation Gags

Carl F. Hermann of the Roosevelt Theatre, Scranton, Pa., did several excellent things in putting over "Seed."

Announcements were made at two popular dance functions; announcements were placed in wrapped packages of the deliveries of three stores several days in advance; star and title of picture were carried on menus of a confectionery store and a photo on the show was placed in a frame in this store window.

A photo of John Boles with a card giving title of picture was placed in a haberdashery window; photo of Lois Wilson with a card having title of picture was placed in a ladies ready-to-wear store window with a floral piece and a photo of Genevieve Tobin and a still from the picture was in a window of a candy store.

These and several other similar tie-ups proved very helpful in publicizing the picture. And all these tie-ups were at no cost.

Fulton Promoted Trick Clock For Advance Display

As an advance lobby display for "Murder By The Clock," R. K. Fulton, manager of the Strand Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, promoted a Westinghouse Columnaire Clock and radio and attached a microphone hook-up to it. This Columnaire Clock and Radio, is a combination with a real radio enclosed in a 5-foot grandfather clock.

It was simple to attach the hook-up to the radio in the clock and through this device, mysterious copy such as "Can the dead kill the dead, etc." was broadcast.

Fulton also arranged a midnight show for "Murder By The Clock," at which time the feature picture was presented in a completely darkened auditorium. A ghostly effect was given the picture at this presentation by attaching the graveyard scene to the opening credit title. This was projected through a green gelatine and by raising the fader, Fulton made the audiences' hair stand on end with the weird moaning sounds recorded on the strip of film taken from the trailer.

Goodwin Staged A Circus Parade In Honor of 'Our Gang'

J. C. Goodwin of the Ritz Theatre, Scranton, Pa., arranged for a tremendous reception and ballyhoo during the week's sojourn of Our Gang Comedy kids.

The kids, on different days of the week, visited practically every orphanage in and surrounding the city—giving impromptu performances. And many of these kids in turn were the guests of the theatre.

Perhaps the parade was the highlight of this campaign. This parade started an hour before a circus parade was to take place and consisted of 2 motor cycle escorts, a 16-piece band, a 40-foot float which the "our gang" kids rode on and several cars.

Forty service staff employees of local Publix theatres were garbed in circus band uniforms. These boys were spotted in four groups of ten each through the parade line. Some of them made up in clown make-up and all carrying banners.

The parade was about two blocks long and covered principal streets on route usually used by circus parades. Immediately after parade, band played in front of theatre for a short time. The only cost to the theatre was $4.50 which was given to nine extra men each to march in uniform.

A local bakery inserted pictures of movie stars in their bread at the rate of 80,000 per day for three days in advance. Pictures carried copy about Our Gang Engagement and information that 5,000 Lucky pictures of Scooter Lowry would be scattered through. These admitted a child to any matinee at the Ritz during GANG engagement. The bakery paid for the pictures.

The above and many other excellent tie-ups keep Our Gang Comedy kids in the minds of the local people throughout the week's engagement.

Kennebeck's Co-Op Strikes New Note In Merchant Tie-Up

A new note was struck in co-operative advertising make-up by Frank Kennebeck, manager of the Le Claire Theatre, Moline, Ill., when he lined up a number of local merchants for a page of ads on "Front Page."

The ads appeared on page 1 of the second section of the newspaper and bore the streamer headline, "Advertisements Worthy of Front Page Position—Read Them All." The noteworthy feature of the page was its novel construction. On the day previous, a cast was made of the front page of the newspaper and nine mortises made of the cast, each measuring approximately 15 inches. In these mortises were inserted the merchants' ads.

In the accompanying reproduction of the page you will readily see that he created something radically different from the ordinary run of co-ops. Instead of being squared up to one another, all the ads are set in a pleasing layout, surrounded by front page stories that appeared the previous day, and the exact reproduction of the page lent color to the whole scheme. That was a smart piece of work, Frank, and we feel sure your brother showmen will fully appreciate the suggestion. Keep the old ball rolling and let us know what else is doing in your town.

Greene Made Tie With Barber Shop For Hair-cut Gag

Fred V. Greene of the Penn Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., made an advantageous tie-up with a leading barber shop that insures the theatre of getting over of some worthwhile advertising on each week's program.

The barber shop gets out a circular announcing that free tickets will be given with every haircut to children under 12 years of age. The lower half of the circular lists the current attractions for the week at the Penn Theatre.

The barber also pays the regular admission price for the tickets. He figures he'll more than make up for it in increased business and the theatre in increased patronage.

We don't recall ever running anything from Fred Greene in the past so here's hoping this is just a forerunner of his active membership in the Club. So many other capable Publix managers belong that we sort of take it for granted that every one of them will make good. We won't be wrong this time, we're sure. What say Fred?

Hendry Attentive To Kiddie Trade As Good Will Gag

The Kiddies are receiving a generous amount of attention from Ray Hendry, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Salt Lake City, and like many other Club members these days he's building up a lot of good-will for his theatre.

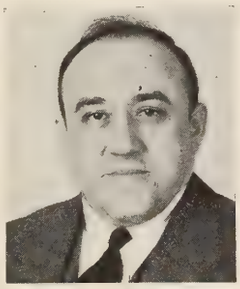
He tied up with the Ked shoes when holding his last kiddie show, each youngster wearing Keds to the theatre being admitted free. In return, the merchants selling this brand of shoes paid for two half-page ads in three local papers which featured the current attraction, not the kid show. These ran on Thursday and Friday and the kid show on Saturday. The show went over with a bang, the theatre getting its regular quota of Club members as paid admissions, with those wearing Keds filling up what otherwise would have been empty seats.

A newspaper was tied in for a special Kiddie show in connection with a run of "Daddy Long Legs." Free transportation was arranged for with the local street car company and the paper ran stories building up to a streamer head on the day of the party. Candy bars were also promoted and given to the kids as they left the theatre. As the show was held during regular matinee performance, seats being allotted to the kids in the balcony, regular patrons were not inconvenienced in any way.

Hendry is getting a nice little break in one of the local papers with a column headed "Movie Mumblings" by Jay D. Bee, the latter being initials for Jack D. Braunagel, his assistant manager and a member of this Club. The paragraphs are newsy and very well written. Jack joined the Capitol a short time ago and now that we have both he and Hendry listed there we feel assured that one or the other will keep us informed on what's going on.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Seventeen years with one company in various capacities is a long time and it's a cinch a fellow has to be well thought of by his associates and be keenly interested in his profession to carry on over this period. So we guess we'll have to pin some distinguished service stripes on the coat sleeves of Orangelo Ratto, veteran in show business and present house manager of Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C.



Orangelo Ratto

"Angie," as he is familiarly known by all his associates, has held practically every position in the theatre business since starting in with the Loew company and gradually climbed the ladder until he reached the desired rung—that of manager of a motion picture theatre.

However, there's a couple of other things he does to perfection in addition to being a capable manager. He's a great guy with the accordian, as anyone who has heard him play will tell you. And he's a champ ping-pong player, more than willing to take on any member of this Club who may dispute the title.

Music is great, "Angie," and so is ping-pong, we guess, but what we'd like to know is a little more about what you are doing to make the cash register sing a merry tune at the Palace. How about letting the rest of the boys in on your stunts?

Election Cigars Aided Reaver To Sell "Politics"

Vernon Reaver of the Alabama Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., passed out campaign cigars to help publicize "Politics."

1,000 cards were printed; copy angle, "Vote for Marie Dressler for Mayor!—Polly Moran, Campaign Manager"—and other copy pertinent to the picture as well as announcing theatre and playdates. These were given an effective distribution throughout the city.

300 of the campaign cards with cigars attached to them by means of a rubber band were used as place cards and put at every member's plate in the following luncheon clubs—Rotary, Lions, Kiwanis, Traffic & Transportation and Real Estate Board.

The place cards were a decided novelty and were the cause of much talk which resulted in lots of favorable comment for the picture.

BUTLER PUT THIS ONE OVER BIG!

—IT SHOULD CLICK FOR OTHERS TOO—

WHEN Wallie Butler was pinch-hitting for the vacationing manager of the Whittier Theatre in California, he was instrumental in putting over this rather unique stunt. From all reports it went over so big that other houses on the coast are making use of it to stimulate business and attract attention.

We liked it, particularly because it was a stunt for both boys and girls and offered enough angles and prizes to work up considerable interest, not only with the youngsters but the adults as well.

Because the contest tied in so well with other merchants we have reproduced the full page ad large enough so that you can read every line of it; and that's what you should do if you are looking for something real new along these lines. Note the various classifications for the prizes and how they were set forth, each with a distinctive little cut.

The newspaper ran an entry blank for several weeks on which the kiddies specified which class they were entering. These blanks were left at the theatre and announced through the paper.

The parade of the pets was one of the outstanding events of this entire affair and attracted no end of attention from the folks in Whittier. They covered all of the main thoroughfares and ended up at the theatre where we show part of the group assembled with their dolls and pets.

Here is a stunt which possesses many fine slants. It opens the way to newspaper co-operation, offers you the chance of getting representative merchants interested and active and will surely make the folks in your community sit up and take notice. This should answer the question of many Club members who have been asking us for something new in kiddie sunts.

The same type of stunt was engineered in Sedalia, Missouri, by Division Publicity Director, F. C. Souttar and Frank J. Celoud the house manager. There the newspaper divided the gag into twenty eight divisions and promoted that number of merchants for the necessary prizes. Following these arrangements, the parade was worked out and the rest followed along smoothly.

There are many interesting sidelights to a stunt of this kind. It lends itself to an exhibition of the various dogs and dolls, providing the theatre has a place to exhibit them. No group of dogs ever won a prize for smelling sweet if confined in some close quarters, so if this latter suggestion appeals to you make sure you have the right spot for the exhibition, preferably outdoors.

Altogether, any smart manager could take a stunt of this kind and, with the proper cooperation from the newspaper advertising manager, make a mighty big thing of it for the entire community. We feel certain that plenty of the boys will do just that, and incidently profit greatly at the b.o. through the attention it will attract. And don't overlook the fine breaks the shops will get through a gag of this kind which is so radically different than the usual co-op page idea, overworked in many communities. Hop aboard this one and see what you can do with it.

Gettier Put On A Big Show At City Pool That Clicked

There may be some communities where Bathing Beauty Contests are getting to be somewhat unseasonable, still as long as favorable weather conditions prevail there's nothing to prevent holding one and there are lots of places where a stunt of this kind can be pulled the year around, indoors or out. So with this in view, we'll tell you about a corking tie-up recently made with the City Pool authorities by Vogel Gettier, manager of the Ottumwa Theatre, Ottumwa, Iowa.

It wasn't hard to sell the Mayor the scheme of holding the contests in the City Pool for the latter was his particular pet; nor was it difficult to get the City to stand for the cost of a full page newspaper ad announcing the event. This was followed up by a quarter page and the officials also granted entries free use of the pool, and use of the diving towers, bath house roofs, etc., for exploitation. Local broadcasting stations were also enlisted, being sold on the idea of boosting the park system.

There were no strings tied to an application for entry, any unmarried girl between the ages of 16 and 25 being eligible. It requested, however, that once entered the applicants must parade at the pool and be judged among the six selected for the finals to be held at the theatre.

Local merchants were then approached for prizes and articles with distinct appeal to girls were obtained which carried a valuation of some $200. The stores also donated windows ten days in advance and paid on an average of $10 per window for cutout displays, giving theatre credit lines and dates. During this period several 24 sheet Jantzen Girls were posted on diving towers and bath house roofs at the pool, along with sign lettered "Who's Going To Be Miss Ottumwa."

The first night the girls appeared at the pool, the parade took place on the walk in front of spectator's area under powerful flood lights and strings of smaller lights. Six judges unknown to entries, with only numbers to identify the girls, were placed at vantage points among the audience and ordered to attempt the selection of two brunettes, two red-heads and two blondes; but that if this was impossible, to pick six to suit their own judgment. No announcements were made at pool as to the six girls selected for runner-ups, providing the theatre with an opportunity to make statement from the highest diving tower that the finals would be held in theatre the following night and of the manner in which Miss Ottumwa would be selected. The runners-up were introduced from the stage and winner was picked by popular choice of audience.

Highlights of Gettier's contest resulted in the attendance of 4,500 spectators at the pool—the largest crowd since its opening—and two and one half times average Friday night receipts at the box office over a period of 10 weeks. In addition, a whale of a lot of publicity for the theatre. He thinks some of the above suggestions may be of help to some of the boys in the "heated spots" and is therefore passing them along.

FALL FASHION SHOWS!

A marvelous wedge to start off the season's era of big business. Possesses a thousand fine slants tying in the local newspaper and every worthwhile merchant in town.

But try to inject new angles to your Fashion Show this year. Have each shop enter their most popular girl in a city-wide popularity contest. Have these girls act as models during the run of the Show and at the final performance make the awards.

Be sure and include hats as a special attraction of this year's Fashion Revue. The radical change in women's hat styles makes this an important part of your Show.

Another suggestion is that you surround your Revue with some fine production so as to set it off to better advantage. Use a few good entertainers, local or professional, to break up the monotony of the parade of models and give them a chance to rest up. Dividing the Show into three or four parts also makes it more interesting. The first part can be devoted to morning attire, lounging negligee, etc. The second for afternoon clothes, bridge dresses, sports wear, etc. Third, dinner clothes, gowns, etc. Fourth, formal dresses, right on down to the nightgowns, underwear, etc.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

After exploring some biographical data concerning Jack Lewis Hobby, one of this Club's well known and progressive members, one reaches the conclusion that it is a toss-up as to just what prank of fate ushered him into show business. It might have been negligence on the part of his nurse, who, during his tender years, let a magic lantern dent his skull; it may have been Brooklyn, his birthplace; or may be the hot Jacksonville, Fla., climate, to which city he migrated; but, at any rate, it is a fact that he became the assistant manager of the Arcade Theatre in the above named city at the age of 17 years.

Jack Lewis Hobby

While at the Arcade he acquired a scholarship which entitled him to a course in the Publix Managers' School and his managing genius successfully negotiated the 1,000-mile trip to New York City. One night at the Rivoli Theatre he became so interested in his chosen profession that he spent the entire night there asleep, awakening only when the cleaning force made a racket scraping chewing gum from seats.

He returned to Florida with the proper Publix bearing and ever since has mixed starch with his oatmeal each morning to retain it. After several years spent at various theatres in Tampa and other points South, he again returned North where he became district supervisor of the Fox-Queens Theatres, New York, and director of advertising over a several months' period for Fox Jersey Theatres. He is at present manager of the RKO Victory Theatre in Providence, R. I., from where he continues to keep his only fraternal organization informed on what's what in show business.

Drachman Reached Rural Trade With Aid Of Newspaper

Thanks to the co-operation of the Tucson Citizen, Roy P. Drachman was able to reach the children in the rural district in regards to "Huckleberry Finn" playing at the Opera House Theatre, Tucson, Ariz.

Since schools are not in session, reaching the rural school children presented a difficult task to Drachman. However, the newspaper helped to solve this situation by carrying stories about the picture for five nights in advance.

The paper also distributed the night before opening of picture, pink guest tickets in all papers delivered over two miles outside of city. These pink tickets permitted any boy under twelve to a free admission. This stunt was worked on the idea that they would not come alone and by careful check, it was found to be true—causing many extra sales of tickets.

Flash Front Used By Drumbar When He Sold Chevalier

W. A. Drumbar of the Tennessee Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., had his theatre gaily bedecked with flags, bunting, stills and art boards to herald the playing of Maurice Chevalier in "The Smiling Lieutenant."

Beaverboard was used to form an arch over the entire entrance way connecting with panels on each end which extended from sidewalk to edge of marquee.

Copy appeared on the archway—cast and name of picture while the panels included enlarged pictures of Chevalier and Colbert as well as groups of stills from the picture and more copy pertaining to the picture.

Flags and bunting appeared above the marquee and a huge cutout head of Chevalier was parked on top of the marquee.

The entire front gave a vivid description that this picture was among the best of the year. And the box office receipts clearly showed that Chevalier was a popular idol in Knoxville.

"THE REASON WHY"

(From the "Bridgeport Post," June 15, 1886)

My son there's nothing on earth so mysteriously funny as an advertisement. The prime, first, last and all the time object of an advertisement is to draw custom. It is not, was not, and never will be designed for any other human purpose. So the merchant waits till the busy season comes and his store is so full of custom he can't get his hat off, and then he rushes to his printer and goes in for advertising. When the dull season gets along and there is no trade and he wants to sell goods so bad he can't pay his rent, he stops his advertising. That is, some of them do, but occasionally a level headed merchant does more of it and scoops in all the business, while his neighbors are making mortgages to pay the gas bill. There are times when you couldn't stop people from buying everything in the store if you planted a cannon behind the door, and that's the time the advertisement is sent out on its holy mission. It makes light work for the advertising, for a chalk sign on the sidewalk could do all that was needed and have a half holiday six days in the week; but who wants to favor an advertisement. They are built to do hard work, and should be sent out in the dull days when a customer has to be knocked down with hard facts, and kicked insensible with bankrupt reductions and dragged in with irresistible slaughter of prices before he will spend a cent.

That's the aim and end of advertising, my son, and if you ever open a store don't try to get them to come when they are already sticking out of the windows, but give them your advertisement right between the eyes in the dull season, and you will wax rich and own a fast horse, and perhaps be able to smoke a good cigar once or twice a year. Write this down where you'll fall over it every day. The time to draw business is when you want business, and not when you have more business than you can attend to already.

Real Cop Helped Dowling Put Over "The Vice Squad"

E. M. Dowling engaged the services of a real cop to work for "The Vice Squad" playing at the Granada Theatre, Olyphant, Pa.

A sedan car had a large sign painted across both sides of the body, "THE VICE SQUAD." This car was driven by one of our real local policemen—in uniform. There were three other men in the car, all dressed in cops' uniforms.

The "Vice Squad" car motored to all neighboring towns as well as traversing Olyphant itself—usually traveling at a rapid rate of speed. The siren horn was blown at different times and sometimes the car was stopped to permit one of the cops to get out and look around. All this attracted much attention and help to popularize the picture.

Rosenthal Made A Tie With Cosmetic Firm For Samples

Morris Rosenthal effected a tie-up with merchants and the Luxor Toiletries Co., that helped immeasurably in putting over "Born to Love" playing at the Capitol Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

The manufacturers of the Luxor toiletries shipped the theatre 2,000 samples of cold cream, face powder and rouge. The theatre in turn had envelopes printed and distributed to five local dealers including two large department stores.

The stores distributed these envelopes to their feminine clientele. Copy on the envelopes informed the holders to present the envelope at the Capitol Theatre the following week when they would receive the samples in the envelopes. One side of the envelopes was devoted to copy about picture, theatre and playdates and the other side listed the stores co-operating.

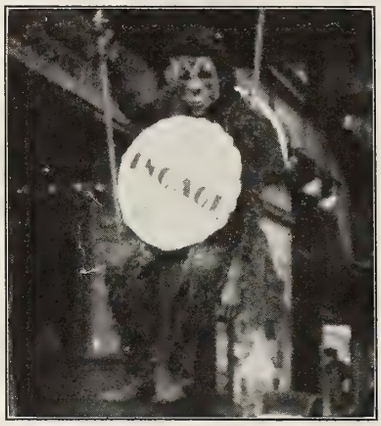
This method of tying up gave the theatre and especially the picture a week of publicity as it was necessary for the women folk to hold on to these envelopes that long to present them at the theatre the following week.

And in addition, all the five stores carried co-operative advertising in their windows featuring the Luxor toiletries and the picture.

Clifford's Harlem Gorilla Was A Good Ad On Jungle Film

Just to prove that neighborhood showmanship has not altogether gone out of fashion in New York City you may believe us when we tell you that Harry Clifford, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, the Bronx, pulled a little stunt that greatly aided the box office when he played "Ingagi" on a double bill.

He secured the services of an agile colored boy and had him dressed in a gorilla outfit, making him look as ferocious as possible.



A sign was then suspended from cords tied around his neck, giving playdates of picture. The boy walked around the neighborhood at certain intervals and at the start of every show climbed a rope attached to the marquee, as you will note from the illustration. As he climbed the rope he'd swing around until a crowd was attracted and then point to the marquee sign which read—"Ingagi—A Vivid Jungle Epic." Following this he would pound on his chest and utter gutteral sounds, showing and gnashing his teeth and again pointing to the sign and to the box office. As a direct result, a number of spectators took the colored boy's advice and went in the theatre to see a real gorilla.

That's bringing the jungle to town all right, Harry, and we're sure that some other Round Tabler can use your idea. Although this is your first contribution to this department, keep up the good work and let us know what else you are doing to sell shows up in your neck of the big city.

Osborne's Special Morning Matinee Drew 3000 Kiddies

J. J. Osborne of the West Side Theatre, Scranton, Pa., put on a special show for the kiddies on the morning of Independence Day with 3,000 kiddies in attendance.

Every child marched in orderly fashion, into the theatre was presented with an American flag, the gift of the Scrantonian, a local paper that helped in putting over the show.

Many notables and officials made brief talks and then followed entertainment;—100 juvenile entertainers took part; a ten-piece orchestra and of course comedy films and an entertaining feature picture.

This affair was the third of its kind, and by far the most successful, to be sponsored by Manager Jack Osborne.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Ben Weshner started in show business at the age of 15 and with the exception of time spent in the field artillery division of the famous "79th" has been in the game ever since. Even the big war couldn't knock the amusement bug out of his head and he's now located in Bloomfield, N. J., where he is in charge of the Royal Theatre.

Ben Weshner

He began his theatre career as jack-of-all-trades, successfully acting as lecturer, relief operator, operator, etc. He studied music on the road with a musical troupe, appeared in vaudeville, was associated with an originator of jazz bands over a five-year period and managed the acts. Other associations led him to the management of roadshows and important connections with the 4 Marx Brothers in "I'll Say She Is" and a number of other well known productions in the legitimate field.

Recent connections with motion picture theatres include the Millburn, Millburn, N. J.; the Cranford, at Cranford, N. J.; the Hollywood and Elizabeth, Elizabeth, and the Dewitt, Bayonne, N. J. There's no chance of him ever leaving show business, but his wide experience may take him into other branches of this field.

Star Was Born In His Town And Ely Grabbed Big Space

Taking advantage of the former citizenship of a motion picture star was splendidly capitalized upon by Johnnie Ely, manager of the New Lillian Theatre, Clarksville, Tenn., as is amply attested by a copy of the local newspaper we have at hand. It was a stunt that earned valuable publicity for his theatre.

When this particular star's latest picture played Clarksville, Johnnie made a call to the paper's editor and reminded him that the lady had spent the greater portion of her life in the home town. The result was a double truck of merchants' ads, mention on the front page and in practically each succeeding page of that issue. The spread also carried generous gratis space advertising the picture.

This is just a reminder from Ely to Club members to keep informed about movie players' birthplaces. This information is available in biography form in most press books and if you will check back over Club files you'll find that this department devoted considerable time and space to the publishing of name, and birthplace of each prominent player in all leading companies. This is good information to have at hand, Round Tablers, for if the occasion should present itself you can cash in just as handsomely as did Johnnie.

Morris Built Big Kiddie Club With Cartoon Book Gag

Any kiddie club that can grow to the extent of 1,400 members in six weeks is something to write home about and so we're going to let you all in on the fact that this is just what happened up in Auburn, N. Y., where Seymour L. Morris holds down the job of managing the Capitol Theatre.

This club was organized around the "Dinky Doodle" cartoons which are shown every Saturday. It is customary to call a meeting of the kids, during which matters of interest to them are discussed. A cartoon book is given them at the time they join and every time they see a cartoon they color the corresponding drawing in the booklet. Prizes are awarded for outstanding work and they are also given membership cards and buttons. Various stores have been tied up with as official "Dinky Doodle" stores and have staunchly supported the move. Whenever a picture especially interesting to children is booked, post cards are mailed to all members.

Certain details of Morris' plan are lacking at this writing but he has volunteered to supply any Club member with further information if they will drop him a line. We surmise that the cartoon booklets are supplied from the home office of the distributor. As to buttons and cards, these were made up especially for him in his home town, the cards carry the ad of a local merchant on the back, which covers cost of printing. We don't know just how he tied up with the several merchants but it will be interesting to receive this information. In the meantime, we extend Club thanks for sending in the idea. Everybody's going after kid trade these days and new angles are just what we're looking for.

FOYER DISPLAY MAKES A HIT!

Patrons got a kick from looking at the attractive display turned out by artist Guy Smith for L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz. This display was used in connection with "Reaching for the Moon.". Note the stack of French 'phones, tying in with the copy in front of the desk.

ASSISTANTS ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THIS CLUB!

With the approval of the house manager, assistant managers are eligible for membership.

We started taking assistants into the Club about a year ago and subsequent surveys have proven that it provides the necessary "push" to make them real showmen. It increases their interest in the business and makes them try all the harder to gain promotion. For the six months period, ending June 30th of this year, Club records show that over three hundred assistant managers were promoted to handle their own houses.

Only accredited assistants are accepted. Those not entitled to this title should not apply as their managers will be asked to certify as to the position they now hold.

The Round Table Club will welcome members in this class and we urge every bonafide assistant manager to send in the application now.

Limerick Contest Effectively Used By Frank Mickley

Since we last heard from Frank Mickley, manager of the Cameo Theatre, Allentown, Pa., his house was taken over by United Chain Theatres of Philadelphia and is now known as the Transit, with second run policy of features and shorts. But Frank was retained as manager and has been stepping along at his usual pace in the business of publicizing pictures and theatre.

He's been running a Limerick Contest which netted a lot of valuable publicity in newspapers and word-of-mouth advertising. In addition to interesting the newspaper, a tie-up was made with a jewelry store for the give-away of a watch as first prize. The theatre donated passes for the second prize, so there was no actual outlay of cash involved. Slips were given to patrons by ushers for the jotting down of the limericks so it will be seen that only ticket purchasers were eligible.

The above stunt has worked out so well for Mickley that he's going to pull it again this Winter, giving two tickets each week for the best verse submitted. This time it will be worked over a local radio broadcast, the jeweler again coming in on the deal and paying the broadcast fee. The theatre will get the last few minutes of the broadcast period to plug that end.

We're reproducing a couple of snap-shots in order to give readers an idea what he's been doing with some other pictures. On "It's a Wise Child" the old reliable baby carriage gag was used to excellent results and we're also showing photo of a man in gorilla costume used to exploit "Ingagi."

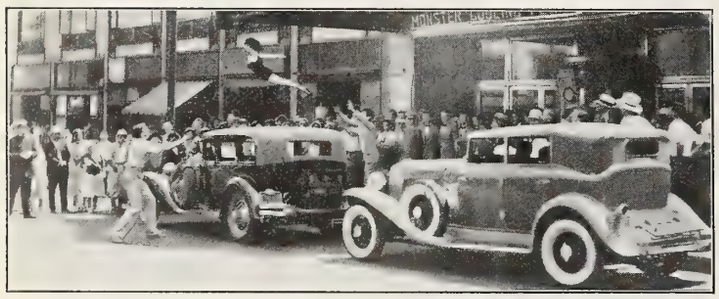
Even though the weather has been exceptionally hot down in his town, he has been holding his own. He plugged his efficient cooling system and dressed the theatre front in blue and white with icicles and snow scenes; while on the walls he used lattice work and flowers of all colors. By this time the new season is under way and we'll be looking for further accounts of what this Round Tabler is doing. In the meantime, Frank, tell Harry Gammett hello next time you see him.

PICTURING ED. HART'S ACTIVITIES!

(Editor's Note)—We are presenting in slightly different form than usual several stunts engineered by E. M. Hart, manager of the New Stanley Theatre, Utica, N. Y.; in other words, we will attempt to inform members pictorially what this well known Round Tabler has been doing since he took over management of this house last July. We label him old Round Tabler because these pages were indebted to him when he held important posts with Fox-Metropolitan and Publix.

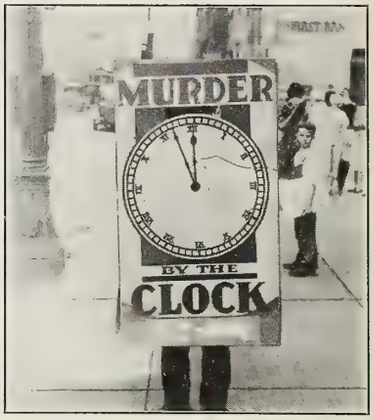
Since locating in Utica he has given local theatre patrons many innovations in the art of picture presentation, such as changing straight vaudeville acts to "presentations", rising orchestra platform and many other novel twists that have been appreciatively received by audiences. Following are photos and captions briefly describing some of the stunts he's pulled. We hope you like them.

One of the stunts Hart used in connection with "Transgression" was the circulation of placards by 50 "Liberty" boy carriers. The illustration above shows how the Stanley ushers were lined up behind the boys for photo which broke in next morning's daily paper. Also note the big 24 sheet cut-outs of Kay Francis and Ricardo Cortez, hung just low enough from marquee to gain attention of passers-by on both sides of street. The cut-outs showed to particular advantage in the newspaper photo. We believe you'll all agree that this is a most striking and effective front and it is safe to assume that those fifty newsboys gave wide circulation to the message he wanted to get over.



And maybe it didn't attract the noon-day crowds downtown when he arranged for the above ballyhoo to be staged in front of the theatre, in which one of the vaudeville artists was thrown over an auto and caught by another trouper on the opposite side. It was necessary to obtain a permit from the Mayor to pull this one and orders were issued to close the street while the act was on. A bugler ballyhooed the stunt in advance and a big round of applause greeted its climax. Needless to state, the auto was tied in with a local dealer. This photo also appeared in next day's paper. Hart is using his vaudeville artists in a variety of ways in addition to regular work in the presentations and this stunt, in particular, was one which caught the public eye.

His ballyhoo on "Reckless Hour" packed a wallop that photographed the picture title in the minds of everyone who saw it. Does that successfully wrecked car in the above photo tell the story of a reckless adventure? We'll say it does, and how! Of course the big wrecking car used to tow the smashed up coupe was promoted from a local auto service company in lieu of advertising received. Again note the effective cut-outs suspended from centre of marquee.



When he played "Murder By The Clock," a walking ballyhoo played an important part in attracting passenger and pedestrian traffic to theatre and picture. Note in the photo how a sandwich man was rigged to handle this advertisement. The copy and weird hand moving the hands of the clock did its share in piling up most satisfactory returns at the box office. Note that the sandwich man's head is completely hidden by the sign, adding to the general effectiveness of the bally. We judge that an aperture was made along the sign at the level of the eyes in order to permit vision. The man was sent through all principal sections of downtown Utica and succeeded in arresting a lot of attention from all.

Another stunt effectively used in connection with this same picture was arrangement for the stage appearance of the well known auto speed demon, Peter de Paolo. Peter was a special attraction along with the Stanley Frolics, as you will note on sign resting against the auto in above photo. Let us also call attention to the striking cut-out, again suspended from marquee so as to command general attention from both street and sidewalk traffic.

He didn't receive a very warm reception from the leading newspaper when he arrived in town for the reason that this old established institution of the Mohawk Valley frowned upon lending any aid to picture exploitation. However, since making a few calls on the management he has succeeded in stirring up a fine co-operative spirit among its staff. And stunts like the one pictured above not only helped matters along but endeared this manager to the hearts of the youngsters.

Jerry Parker Kept Business Up To Par By "Little Extras"

That "little extra something" was what kept the Commodore Hull Theatre, Derby, Conn., up to the mark during the past summer and these little extras were engineered by Jerry A. Parker, manager of this house in the Naugatuck Valley.

For instance, over the 4th he felt that something a little out-of-the-ordinary should be done in the way of added attraction and some local talent saved the day. This talent was recruited from several points around "the Valley," thereby creating interest from each town. A herald was gotten out for the occasion and distribution was affected by giving a few passes to the local newsboys. The house played to capacity business on a day universally conceded "tough." No cost to theatre.

When he played "Laughing Sinners" several merchants were tied in with ads headed, "You Can't Buy Love On Approval," then name the star, title, theatre and playdates. The lower portion of the ad stated "But You Can Buy"—so and so at Blanks Store. This not only secured free advertising but the merchants also donated window space for displays of stills, etc. On "Vice Squad" he also managed to horn in on some costless advertising by getting out a tab herald for a merchant who allowed the theatre space. For "Broadminded" he ran a large ad with cartoon sketch of Joe E. Brown and offered two guest tickets for the first twenty-five colored sketches of merit. This was aimed at the kiddies or adults and was tied in with the local newspaper. Another move that secured plenty of free mention in the newspaper was the booking of the Schmeling-Stribling fight pictures for exclusive showing in his zone.

And so it goes over in Derby where Jerry tells us they don't even believe that the country has been going through tough times. He tells us these little stunts helped him along and for any of you to help yourselves if the idea appeals. At this writing he and Johnny Scanlon have moved over in Torrington, Conn., where they will have charge of all Warner theatre interests in this city. Keep your eyes on these two Round Tablers and be prepared to read about what they are doing in their new location. Just as soon as they find their way 'round you'll hear from them.

The up-staters got a pleasing eye-full when Hart turned loose four of his stage troubers on the main stem. In fact he was so afraid of losing them that he sent along a convoy of ushers you see standing at the right and left of group. Stage presentations are clicking along in great shape at the Stanley and Uticans don't mind getting a close-up of the girls now and then.

It isn't often that church premises are used for picture exploitation and as a matter of fact the above photo does not show the several messengers actually standing on the grounds—they're on the curbstone. The bearers of the letters spelling the title of star and picture title carried this ad through principal thoroughfares and the above location offered such a novel background that the photographer just had to take a shot.

ED. LEWIS IS BACK IN THE BIG TOWN!

After handling the Park in Reading, Pa., to the satisfaction of both the theatre owners and patrons, Ed Lewis is back in harness operating the Carlton Theatre in Jamaica.

There are few showmen as capable of handling vaudeville houses as Ed and it would not surprise us one bit to see him duplicate his many past successes in the management of this beautiful theatre.

Of course, this announcement may attract all of Ed's old creditors, but then we could never pass up the chance of letting his friends know where he is hanging his hat. And he has so many friends that he may be swamped with congratulations; although we can't think of any reason why he should. But anyway, just to be serious for a moment, we doubt whether there is a better showman in this country, and that's taking in an awful lot of territory. But you have to cover a lot of ground when you speak of a man like Ed Lewis.

So; here's wishing him a packed house every night and three times on Saturdays and Sundays. (Did you say Amen, Ed?)

——No Empty Seats This Season!——

Hollis Drew Built Trade In Spite Of Adverse Condition

When a theatre can go through the past season of tough sledding without recourse to business stimulators such as give-aways, double feature programs and lowered admissions, there must be a reason, and a good one. In the case of the New Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., we are forced to conclude that the reason this house stood up so well under adverse seasonal conditions, was because of its manager, Hollis Drew, who was the man behind the gun in a number of cooperative stunts which built up both box office and theatre good will.

To begin with, the local Board of Trade inaugurated a series of weekly bargain days, over 50 merchants and two newspapers supporting the move. As a special feature of this scheme, the theatre supplied all merchants with dated "two-for-one" tickets to be given with bargain day purchases only. As these were dated for the following Wednesday of each week and were redeemable only on dated night, all confusion was avoided and use of them restricted to the one night. Consequently, Wednesday turned out to be one of the best spots in the week, often exceeding Saturday.

Then the Town Fathers decided to hold a Centennial Celebration, one of the features of which was a "Queen Contest." In close touch with civic affairs, Drew learned that the committee in charge of the forthcoming event was not at all averse to receiving revenue from some source to help finance operations. So he tied in with the Contest Committee and supplied theatre tickets which were sold at box-office prices, each ticket sold by candidates being good for 1,000 votes. These tickets were supplied to the Committee at 10c each, realizing a profit of 25c on every sale.

The candidates appeared on the stage at advertised performances and the final judging and award was made from the stage. As care was taken to hold contest results secret until stage announcement, both interest and business ran far above normal. The Committee reaped over $400 from the ticket sale while the theatre received in cash several hundred dollars and an immense amount of free publicity and good will.

The theatre also participated in the Centennial street parade with a comedy float which came in for a lot of comment and applause along the entire route. It consisted of a large truck with a nice friendly looking cow tied on the rear platform. Large banners bore copy reading, "This Is No Bull—Your Centennial Visit Will Be Incomplete Until You Visit the Strand—Michigan's Finest."

And in these ways Drew built up business while some calamity howlers were lying down on the job. Some will say he got a great break when the town decided to stage a Centennial. Maybe so. Why not try making this suggestion if your town has been in existence 100 years or more? The City Fathers might welcome the idea. And then you're all set for a slice of the melon. Perhaps another reason why Drew is so successful with the operation of his theatre lies in his advertising policy. He does not understand why some managers plug institutional copy about how wonderful their sound equipment is when it is just plain lousy; nor does he comprehend publicity given "cool comfort" when there isn't even a blower in the house. But he does think that every theatre has some legitimate feature which can honestly be sold.

The above reproduction shows a copy of the monthly program issued by W. E. Tooley, manager of the State Theatre, Red Bluff, Calif. Obviously it was run off from a line cut and we think that he's done a particularly worthy piece of work. A program of this kind cost but little more than the ordinary run of this advertising medium and we believe results more than justify the additional expense.

Blair Is Featuring "What A Picture" Month In His City

Something interesting in advertising is always being pulled off by E. E. Bair, manager of the State and American Theatres, East Liverpool, Ohio, and we note that he recently featured a "What A Picture Month" as advance publicity for pictures to be played during September.

In a big four column announcement ad about 12 inches deep he told his public that "They'd Remember September" and went on to state his reasons why the several outstanding features listed below would appeal to patrons. Prior to the running of this ad a series of teaser insertions were made, followed with trailer copy and bill boards.

Sunday movies have been legalized in Ohio and along with many other theatre men Bair is doing his part to focus attention on a condition which hasn't existed for a long time. He's using one sheets to inform the public that "They Can Shop and Play"—and "To Spend the Week-End in East Liverpool."

His well-layed-out ads on current attractions continue to appear in the local newspaper; likewise, his famous column consisting of running comment on coming attractions. Copy in the latter reads anything but like an ad but that's what it is for a foot note states that it's one of a series of advertisements published every now and then by the State and American Theatres.

We hear that the "What a Picture Month" is clicking along nicely and we can also believe that the local merchants are much pleased with the campaign he's carrying on to keep people in town over the week-end. We've published quite a number of Bair's ads in past issues of this department and will get some more of them together for a future layout. The column has also been fully described but in case any Club member wants further information we'll supply it, or a line to him will have the desired effect.

F. Smith Used Man In Uniform To Plug A Chevalier Picture

One of the stunts used by Floyd F. Smith in advertising Maurice Chevalier in "The Smiling Lieutenant" playing at the Paramount Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., was used on the street and in department stores.

A man, attired in a uniform similar to the one worn by Chevalier in the picture, worked in and out of the department stores and on the streets—handing out calling cards on which was printed, "Save a date for THE SMILING LIEUTENANT—Paramount Theatre, Saturday, August 1."

Smith also used a lobby stunt that proved a popular diversion as well as an excellent medium in exploiting the picture. A large board was constructed listing a number of coming attractions as well as the current picture. If the arrow pointed to The Smiling Lieutenant after the wheel had been spinned, the "spinner" was entitled to a guest ticket to see the picture.

Pfeiffer Boosted Summer Trade With Several Good Ideas

Several business boosting stunts were employed during the warm weather months by Jack E. Pfeiffer, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Hammond, Ind., which included vacation trips, give-aways and bargain admissions.

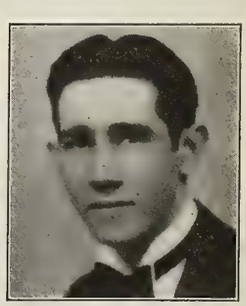
He tied up with one of the big bus lines for a free vacation trip to Canada via Niagara Falls in the usual fashion, arranging a box in the lobby as a receptacle for the tickets. This same plan was also worked with a local jewelry store during the Warner Jubilee, the concern donating three awards.

Looking over some samples of heralds used by the Orpheum, we note that double-feature bills were offered at the "bargain" of 10, 20 and 30 cents and, according to the grade of pictures played, patrons certainly did get their money's worth. At least one herald was gotten out gratis, for we note that he made a tie-up with a shoe store for the give-away of Keds at each Saturday matinee during August.

Everybody has had to pull for business the past few months and the methods used by Pfeiffer can be put in effect most any season of the year. These helped him over the rough spots and so he's passing them along for others to use if they see fit. Even though they tell us that "prosperity is just around the corner," it won't do any harm to have them tucked away for use when the occasion demands some antidote of this sort. If any one should want further details on the above tie-ups, we feel sure that Jack will be glad to furnish them if you will drop him a line.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Chance threw George C. Lewis into show business at the age of 17 when a friend secured for him the job of usher at the Apollo Theatre, Peoria, Ill. But it turned out to be a lucky chance at that, if we are any kind of a judge, for his theatre career since that time shows a steady stream of promotions until the present sees him occupying a position which, at the age of 21, can be classed as sitting on top of the world. He's now a city manager, with headquarters at the Wildey Theatre, Edwardsville, Ill.



George C. Lewis

After a few months of ushering at the Apollo he was given the assistant managership of this theatre and one year later was transferred to the same post in the Majestic Theatre, Bloomington, Ill. He then acted as assistant at the Irvin Theatre, also in Bloomington, and was later made acting manager. Several months later he returned to manage the Apollo during the illness of the regular manager. Upon the latter's return, he was transferred to his present post.

He modestly states that he was fortunate in obtaining rapid advancement with Great States and when Publix took over the circuit two more advancements followed. However, we'll venture the opinion that circuit executives don't promote men who do not deserve this honor. He enjoys his work so much that there isn't a thought of ever getting out of it and inasmuch as trade papers claim his attention, in order to keep well informed, there's a chance he will respond to our wish that he will continue to let this department know what's going on in his territory.

THE KIDDER GOT KIDDED!

EDITOR'S NOTE—When Arnie Eichenlaub planned to give away a "live baby," he did not take into consideration some of the town's practical jokers, with the result that they handed Arnie several minutes of worry.

The local paper's description tells the tale better than we could so here it is; read it and chuckle at poor Arnie's expense:

"All week long Arnie Eichenlaub, manager of the Fox-Jones Theatre, had been telling the people through 'The Daily Record' that he was going to give a real live baby away at the show on Friday night.

"Eichenlaub was true to his word.

"At the intermission he appeared on the stage and following him came Miss Dorothy Sterling, dressed as a nurse and pushing a baby carriage.

"Arnie arranged the baby's covers nicely and then stepped to the front of the stage to address the audience.

"'Ladies and Gentlemen,' he began. This theatre has promised that tonight we would give away a real live baby. We are going to keep our word. Here we have a real live baby. It was raised on the ranch of Mr. and Mrs. Sterling. It is seven months old. Its parents are of good blood and the baby is a beauty. The police and others have tried to interfere, but we are going to keep our word. No one can stop us. You will see here a real live baby and——!

"Just then he turned around to point to the cab and the nurse when his glance settled upon a pretty girl holding a real live baby in her arms.

"Eichenlaub was flabbergasted. He gasped, and turned toward the audience to get a little composure, but saw a sight which made him worse. There was Chief of Police John Donahoo slowly walking down the aisle toward the stage.

"It was fully a minute before he could talk and then he made up for lost time—talking rapidly and finally exposing the baby he planned to give away, a pig, dressed in lovely baby clothes. Perspiration stood all over Eichenlaub's brow as he got himself out of his difficulties as quickly as possible.

"The real live baby was Miss Josephine Dolan, 2 months old, and was held by Miss Gertrude Hopper of Chicago, a relative of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Dolan who was pressed into service because she had been in town only a few hours and was not known by Eichenlaub.

"The 'frame-up' on Eichenlaub was aided and abetted by Chief of Police Donahoo."

Foster Invited All Pajama-Clad Femmes To Come As Guests

All ladies between the ages of six and sixty were admitted free of charge to a "Pajama Party" held recently by G. H. Foster, manager of the Kenton Theatre, Kenton, Ohio.

The occasion was an all-comedy program scheduled on Tuesday and all a lady had to do to win a guest ticket was to come to the theatre rigged in a suit of those bizarre pajamas so popular among the femmes this past season. About 250 patrons, assorted as to age and size, took advantage of the invitation. The photo will show some of them lined up in front of the theatre.

It may be that the girls have packed the above costumes away in moth-balls at this season but undoubtedly they'll be wearing the same things or something worse next year and this little gag of Foster's will be a good one to file away until then. And, of course, there are a lot of warm weather places where it can still be put to use. Also, the idea may inspire some other manager to pull the same stunt with some other kind of rigging during the coming months. At any rate, we thank G. H. for passing the information along and hope he'll keep up the good work because it's stuff like yours that is of real use and value to the thousands of showmen operating in situations similar to yours. In fact, we particularly want exploitation and examples of real showmanship from the smaller town and city in preference to the key cities.

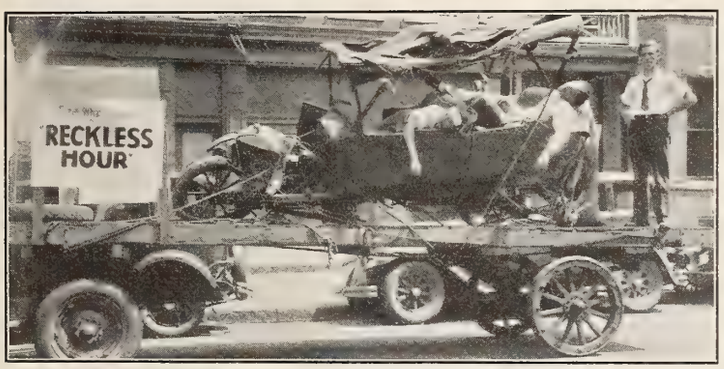
Warren Slee Used Two Corking Gags To Plug Pictures

It is always a pleasure to record what Warren A. Slee, manager of the National Theatre, Richmond, Va., is doing in the showselling line for this live-wire Club member is constantly pulling some stunt which makes his public sit up and take notice.

One of his recent gags that captured just what he wanted in the way of attention was the old one with the baby-carriage. This he used in connection with Joe E. Brown in "Broadminded" and as you note in the illustration, an adult occupied the space generally reserved for a baby and another full grown male specimen filled in as nurse. The carriage occupant was dressed in regulation baby attire and the one who supplied the motive power was clothed in blouse, knee-breeches, white stockings, horn-rimmed spectacles and a plug hat. The vehicle was pushed through the principal thoroughfares, both "baby" and "nurse" occasionally indulging in funny antics.

The other picture we are presenting along with this story appears to have been shot about the time Grant visited Richmond but this is not so; it's just another ballyhoo stunt of Slee's—if we must let you in on it. When playing "Reckless Hour," he secured the most dilapidated Ford wreck he could find for the occasion and hoisted it aboard a truck. The services of two young fellows were engaged to simulate victims of a terrific collision and they and the truck were driven through parts of the city where circulation of the message was desired. A sign attached to the truck read, "See What Happens in the Reckless Hour—National—Starts Monday."



Both of these stunts worked out so well for him that we are taking the liberty of passing them along to the rest of the boys and we'll be hoping to hear some more about what he's doing to keep the National's seats well filled. It's comforting to be informed that you are having such fine ice-skating in Richmond this season, Warren, and we feel sure that the rinks are not all crowded at the time you leave your theatre to indulge in a few figure-eights.

——Get Your Share Of Big Business!——

Stowell Plugged Film Through Tie With A Restaurant

Harry C. Stowell tied up with the opposition to plug "The Lawyer's Secret," playing at the Paramount Theatre, Middletown, N. Y.

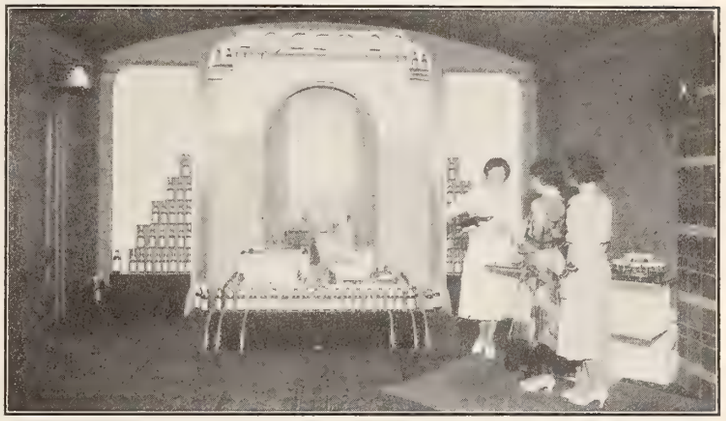
First, Stowell made arrangements with a Coffee Shoppe whereby this establishment printed 10,000 throwaways containing co-operative copy about the coffee shoppe, theatre and flying circus.

The flying circus was in town on a Sunday and Monday. These people were induced at no cost to the theatre to drop these throwaways over the town during one of their flights.

A part of the copy on the throwaways read, "After you fly with the GOODWILL FLYING CIRCUS and attend the Paramount Theatre, dine at Middletown's popular Mitchell Inn Coffee Shop."

The reverse side of the throwaway read, "It's No Secret—You will enjoy flying with the Goodwill Flying Circus but THE LAWYER'S SECRET is at the Paramount Theatre Today."

TIE-UP WITH YOUR BEVERAGE DEALER!



Prior to leaving the Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, to take an important post with Paramount-Skouras, Charley Carroll made a profitable tie-up with the Hoffman Beverage Co., for the installation of a Cooling Display in the theatre lobby. Free drinks of every flavor manufactured by this concern were served gratis to theatre patrons from Decoration Day until Labor Day. The beverage company secured some splendid advertising and the theatre reaped a world of good will from the stunt.

Local Conditions Formed Keynote Of Durfee's Campaign

Local conditions governed to a degree the campaign made on "Politics" by the Durfee Theatre, Fall River, Mass., inasmuch that the city was on the verge of dispensing with certain public service; however, there were many other stunts employed which did their share to send the picture over the top.

This theatre is one of the entrants in the M-G-M contest for exploitation honors on this feature and while the Club sent a letter to this house in order to bestow proper credits, we'll attempt to decipher the press representative's name appearing on his report. After comparing letters with others it looks like W. S. Canning. Right or wrong, maybe he'll let us know.

As stated above, the city was considering closing a hospital and dispensing with the service of picking up scavenge; so an ad was framed around these two questions and it offered Marie Dressler for a woman Mayor as a means to correct the situation. We are reproducing a copy of one of them on this page. Other ads were run carrying rally notices to clean up the city and keep the hospital.

The rally was staged on a Saturday night and a truck ballyhooed the event along all the main streets. A real old fashioned torch-light parade was pulled off the opening evening, participated in by men and boys carrying banners and making announcements. The parade wound up in front of the theatre where the front was barricaded to present the appearance of voting booths. Red fire illuminated the entire block and the report states that police had to open a lane to allow patrons to get inside the theatre.

The Durfee management was on the job when it came to taking advantage of local political questions and it is to be congratulated for its quick action. The entire campaign brought outstanding returns to the box office and after all this is what counts. The Club will look forward to hearing more from these enterprising showmen over in Fall River.

We note the proposed new tax for cinemas in England and know Fox will have to step on it this season. But this will stimulate thought for new show-selling ideas and we hope he'll keep his fellow members informed about his activities.

RUSSEL M. HOGUE is the assistant manager of the Fox-Lincoln Theatre in Charleston, Ill., and according to an endorsement given him by his Boss, Gerald F. Baker, Hogue is steering straight for a full-fledged manager's job in the near future. He's 20 years old and has been at this theatre for 2 years, recently being promoted from doorman to his present position. We're glad to have you with us, Hogue, and feel sure that you will benefit from reading about what other capable showmen are doing. Be sure to keep in touch with your Club.

JOHN CALMAN is back in Birmingham, Ala., after an absence of eight years and he sends his application for Club membership from the Temple Theatre. His return to this city was the occasion for a two-column signed story in one of Birmingham's leading newspapers and we note that in addition to being an old timer in show business, he's also an accomplished musician. Several years ago he operated a number of theatres in this city and prior to his return was in charge of a house in Charlotte, N. C. We're mighty glad to have him for a member and hope he will keep his Club posted on what's going on in his theatre zone.

ORAN COHEN holds down the assistant manager's job at the Maryland Theatre, Hagerstown, Md., and was promoted to this post at the time Walter Morris was transferred to Hagerstown, to assume supervision of all Warner theatres in this zone. Prior to his promotion Cohen was the chief of service at the Metropolitan, one of Baltimore's big houses, recently managed by Walter Morris. He's moving up the ladder of success and it probably won't be long before he'll be in charge of his own house. Keep Club headquarters posted, Oran, so we can announce your next promotion to management of your own theatre.

GUY JONES has some title down at the Princess Theatre, Cleveland, Tenn. —he's the exploitation man, artist and general asisstant for this Crescent Amusement Co. house. And in between time he finds a few moments to devote to the sketching of cartoons based on show selling stunts. Now that he has become a member of this organization, we shall hope to present some samples of both exploitation work and cartoons. And we don't mind telling you that this man can do tricks with india ink.

GEORGE G. MEANS manages the Fox-Mokan Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., and like the host of his brother Fox theatre managers in this organization, will henceforth do his share of making contributions in the interest of show business. We note that he changes four times weekly and know that he's kept on the jump selling shows, but hope that Means will find time to keep his Club informed on what's going on at his theatre.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. M. NYE is in charge of the Orpheum Theatre in Glasgow, Mont., and he's another new member to join this Club. Sit down to your typewriter, E. M., just as soon as you can find the time and tell us what you are doing to sell shows out your way. We're sure that you will have something interesting to say and can assure you that all your fellow Round Tablers will want to hear your views.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE C. CRONIN is another assistant manager to become a member of this organization and his manager, Irving P. Alexander, states that George is particularly adept at effecting successful tie-ups. The Club is glad to have you as a member, Cronin, and knows that you are rendering valuable assistance to your Boss. Keep up the good work and we predict you'll soon be managing a house of your own.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

QUESTION NO. 95.—(A) What attention should be given the pick-up optical system each day? (B) Suppose, after starting, the sound blurred, was perhaps sharp, or fairly so for an instant and then blurred again. Where would you seek the trouble, and just how would you proceed to remedy it?

Special: I have been asked by the office of the Director of Projection of a large theatre chain to ask the following question in this "School":

The theory of action of a DC motor is that a current carrying conductor placed in a magnetic field will tend to move in such direction as will embrace the greatest number of lines of force. QUERY: What is the theory of action in an induction motor?

There, I'll admit that this had your editor tied for a while. I know now what the answer is, but believe you will have to do some digging to find it out.

QUESTION NO. 96.—Describe the action of a Western Electric fader. Why is it not practical to use a variable resistance in series with the pick-up and main amplifier? Describe the arrangement of the W. E. fader elements. Between what two elements of the sound system is the fader located?

QUESTION NO. 97.—Explain the location of each half of the W. E. fader coils with relation to each other and to the film pick-up amplifier. Explain the use of the switches at the top of the fader. What will be the effect if the fader pointer be not kept on one of the numbers—kept between two of them? How may either the red or white side of the fader be cut out?

THE FUNCTION OF THE STORAGE BATTERY

The amateur projectionist wants to know how electricity is stored in a storage battery. After advising him to study storage battery construction, operation and care, pages 1083 to 1098 of the third volume of the Bluebook of Projection, I will, for the benefit of young students in Projection, explain as follows:

First of all there is no electricity stored in any battery, storage or otherwise. Fully charged, there is no more electricity in a battery than there is in a corn cob. In the charged battery however, there is a power to by chemical action produce electricity, and that power is there in exact proportion to the amount of electrical action that has been put into the battery by charging, and which has not yet been used.

The storage battery consists primarily of a suitable vessel filled with electrolyte, which is a liquid composed of pure water into which a certain percentage of sulphuric acid has been introduced. Into this liquid two plates of lead are suspended, the same being insulated from each other.

As a matter of fact in practice there are two groups of plates joined together, but separated by thin strips of wood. One of these plates or groups of plates are connected to the positive and the other to the negative pole of the generator and after the generator has been operated for some time a compound known as lead peroxide will be found to have formed on the surface of the plate connected to the positive terminal of the generator. This of course is then the "positive plate." The negative plate will have been changed into a spongy or porous form of lead.

These deposits of lead peroxide and the alteration in the form of the negative plate is caused by chemical action set up by the current from the generator.

You know the thing they put across streams to hold the water back? Well, that's what I said when the answers began coming in late and I found upon investigation, that the makeup man had omitted the printing of the Bluebook School Questions. Some day I'm going to murder the bugler. Change that last word to makeup man and then go on singing. The best way to catch up is to omit the answers for two weeks, and print three questions in this issue.—F. H. R.

Now if these plates be disconnected from the generator and connected to an electric circuit, the chemical action before spoken of will reverse itself and produce power. The lead peroxide deposit will gradually disappear from the positive plate, and the negative plate will assume its original form. In that process electrical power is generated, which may be used exactly as you would use current from a D.C. generator. The amount of power will be exactly the same amount that was put into the two plates by the charge, save and except that small loss which is always incident to the production or use of power. It is the loss caused by friction, in this case of course electrical friction.

There, I believe that ought to explain to the novice how power is stored in and taken from a storage battery.

The chief objection to lead plate storage battery is the weight. This objection brought about the production of the storage battery by Thomas A. Edison, in which the negative plate is of iron, held in a steel frame. The positive plate is nickle peroxide, the solution instead of being water and sulphuric acid, is caustic soda. These batteries are very efficient, but they are much more costly to construct than the lead type, hence have been most largely used in self propelled traction vehicles, where excessive weight is of course a large objection.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

New York Roxy

Week ending September 17

"Blues" and "Opera," featured on the stage and from the pit, respectively, offered a diversified and entertaining presentation this week at "The Cathedral."

Titled "Blues," the stage production is composed largely of numbers illustrating the various "blues" waltzes and ballads, with stage sets and costuming in various shades of blue to capture the spirit of the theme.

The Ballet Corps, the Singing groups and the Roxyettes all contribute to the Blue Ensemble, with the Symphony Orchestra adding musical color to the whole. The soloists include Yascha Zayde, Rosemary Cameron, Patricia Bowman, Sudworth Frazer and the Roger Pryor Dodge Trio.

Scene 1, designated as "The Blue Danube," opens to a simply made but exceedingly spectacular "waterfall" scene, in which Patricia Bowman exemplifies the personification of grace in her usual fine performance of toe dancing. The Ballet Corps, in flowing robes of silver, manipulate large silver fans as they perform graceful ballet routines.

Scene 2. A subdued setting with only a silver silhouette to break up the plainness of the scene. This is the setting in which Yascha Zayde, Argentine pianist, makes his debut to American audiences. The concert itself consisted of Zayde's playing of Liszt's Concerto in E Flat and the "Perpetuo Mobile" by von Weber. Zayde's technique at the piano proved him to be an accomplished musician but to the minds of most of the audience, apparently, this type of entertainment should be left to the concert stage and should not be injected in a jazz presentation.

Scene 3. The Roger Pryor Dodge Trio of eccentric dancing. These three boys, made-up in grotesque manner, performed a modernistic jazz routine, which, though enthusiastically received, could have stood more rehearsing.

Scene 4. "Memphis Blues," precision jazz routine by the thirty-two Roxyettes, done before a cyclorama for shadow effects.

The orchestral overture, conducted by Maurice Baron, is more than ordinarily pretentious. A 20 minute condensation of "Rigoletto" with an illustrative stage production in which Beniamino Riccio sings the role of the pathetic old Jester, while Sudworth Frazer takes the part of the Duke. Rosemary Cameron and Louise Scheerer also perform in this entertaining production overture.

Featured this week is the Fox picture, "Merely Mary Ann."

Stage Acts Are Dropped In Two California Cities

Fox West Coast Theatres has announced the elimination of Fanchon and Marco stage acts at Fresno and San Jose, Cal. The decision followed close upon a wage increase to projectionists at Fresno.

Music Firm Wins Suit

The United States District Court in Cincinnati has enjoined the Rialto, operated by Thomas A. Reilly, from using in the theatre songs copyrighted by Famous Music Corporation of New York, which brought suit.

ARLO HULTS

We shall start out by telling you the truth and that is that this "Barrymore" profile which you see above is not of a famous screen star but of one of New York's popular organists. He is featured soloist at the RKO 86th Street Theatre, where he has been for the past six months. Arlo is another of those out-of-town boys who have made good in the big city and one who is still making good and even hopes to do better. He started his career at the Mainstreet Theatre, Kansas City, Missouri, and while vacationing in New York one year, was offered the position of featured organist at Loew's Lexington Theatre. For a year he presented the type music the discriminating audiences of this house craved, then when the chance of going over to the RKO circuit was offered him, he jumped at it. This circuit sent him to the Kenmore Theatre in Brooklyn, where he again proved himself a box-office attraction. He stayed here for a year and was then transferred to the Chester where he entertained his audiences with original novelties for two years.

This young fellow had a difficult time at this house, as there was no slide machine and all of his solos had to be explained orally, musically and in pantomime. Nevertheless he succeeded and made a big name for himself. His work at the Chester got him the berth of soloist at the 86th. This proved very successful and offered Arlo a chance to show his showmanship, his musical ability and let this more metropolitan audience hear his fine singing voice.

This chap is destined for plenty big things.

Calloway Back On NBC

Cab Calloway and his Cotton Club Orchestra returned to the NBC networks September 14, after completing an 18,000-mile tour of the United States.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Fox

Week ending September 9

The Fox Concert Orchestra under the direction of Walt Roesner offers selections from the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, "The Mikado" and "Pinafore," and Joaquin Garay sings "Was It Wrong," as a musical prelude to Fanchon & Marco's frothy "Gay Vienna Idea."

The stage show opens with Emma Woodlund and Roy Smoot in a large illuminated heart singing "Two Hearts in Three-quarter Time" and as they close the song the heart becomes two and they carry the singers to both sides of the stage. The Sunkist Beauties come on in peasant costumes and do a dance led by Marie Donnelly and Beatrice Auebke.

Rena and Rathburn, loose-limbed inebriates, offer a turn that seems a waste of effort and the audience response is weak. The principals could be cast in a more appealing offering.

The Sunkist Beauties appear as Franz Joseph's famous bodyguard and form a colorful background for the superb musical offering of Duci De Kerekjardo, violin virtuoso. He offers "The Old Refrain" as an encore, with Emma Woodlund singing the air.

The Gaudsmith Brothers do acrobatic antics and introduce a couple of trained dogs which prove to be the hit of the show. The best part of it is that the dogs seem to enjoy their act as much as does the audience.

The Sunkist Beauties, in evening attire, do a lovely dance with huge fans of colored ostrich plumes, producing effects which win deserved applause. The featured singers enter the illuminated hearts on either side of the stage and the hearts slowly approach each other and again become one as the girls with their fans pose on a revolving pedestal.

Pittsburgh Stanley

Week ending September 10

The forty-five minute stage presentation this week is a bright and lively affair and is scoring heavily with the audiences. It is called "Melody Lane," and the opening is very colorful with twenty girls on the stage doing one of those dances in which they revolve colored parasols.

Dick and Edith Barstow show some great toe tap dancing, their work up and down a small flight of stairs being little short of sensational.

Peggy Bernier, "blues" singer, is back with some new songs and puts them over in her usual peppy manner. She seems to be popular here.

Dick Powell, m. c., sings "With You On My Mind," and his voice is better than ever. His popularity remains boundless.

The big hit of the show is the personal appearance of Harry Langdon and his company. Harry Langdon is the best "movie star in person" appearance we've seen here yet. Harry does just what the public wants him to do. He appears in the costume he always wears on the screen, goes through his various little mannerisms and is a positive riot.

Orchestra Conductor Shifted

Sam Freed, Jr., conductor of the Hippodrome orchestra in New York, has been assigned to the RKO Albee in Cincinnati, succeeding Rudolph Tschudi.

SLICES OF MELLIN

CHICAGO

"Joe Roberts is esteemed one of the best orchestra leaders heard over the air." This statement was made to me by one of the officials of the National Broadcasting Company, who also adds that Joe's orchestra is adaptable to the microphone, which faithfully transmits the youth, fire and spirit that this generation is clamoring for. This accounts for Joe's popularity and the reason he was chosen to take Paul Whiteman's place at the Edgewater Beach hotel, while the latter is vacationing for the next two weeks. Although still a young man, Joe's accomplishments are many. He plays many instruments in the band, and is the proud possessor of a marvelous singing voice. Joe is a sure comer and should prove a big drawing card wherever he appears.

An Eastern invasion of the middle west's most popular orchestra is scheduled for October 1, when Coon-Sanders and their Original Nighthawks open at the Hotel New Yorker, New York City, for the fall and winter season. Carleton Coon and Joe Sanders will take to New York the same band which originally gained national popularity for the "Nighthawks" during their broadcasts over WDAF, Kansas City, about eight years ago. Attracted by their success in Kansas City, officials of the Music Corporation of America induced Coon-Sanders to come to Chicago about six years ago.

Their success in Chicago is still the talk of the country. For six years they have appeared at such places as the famous Blackhawk Cafe, the Congress hotel and the Dells, broadcasting nightly either through chain or local hookups. There is no doubt in the minds of countless fans of the Coon-Sanders band that Joe and Cooney will take New York by storm, for these boys have everything it takes to make up a great organization. Joe, who plays the hottest piano of anybody I know, will tickle the ivories until it tickles your very spine and you will tingle with joy, and Cooney beating away at the drums will beat old man gloom away and make you dance to your heart's content. What singing, what pep! This band has got that certain thing called "IT" in capital letters.

Guy Lombardo, one of America's ace orchestra leaders, is going to play a "command performance." Lombardo and his Royal Canadians were asked by Governor Franklin Roosevelt of New York to play for a state function at the Royal Pavilion.

Mark Pascoe, who marks time to Leon Bloom's music at station WBBM, just returned from a well deserved vacation, visiting relatives in Philadelphia. . . . The internationally famous musical organization of Paul Whiteman, dean of modern music, will continue to be heard nightly over KYW, at least until January 1st. The good news of his continuance until this date of the Whiteman Orchestra's appearance at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Northside, Chicago, came this week with the announcement by National Broadcasting of the extension of the hotel's contract with Whiteman from September 15th to the first of the year. The extension of the contract came as a sort of wedding present to Whiteman who was married last week. Incidently, besides many screen luminaries and musicians present were George Olsen and Wayne King, fellow batoneers. King's entire orchestra was present and donated their music to the success of the matrimonial venture.

New York Paramount

Week ending September 17

The Frank Cambria production, "Bandemonium," featuring Ben Bernie and His Band, proved just as entertaining on the stage as they do over the air. It has been two years since Bernie and his gang have been in New York, but due to their broadcasting they are still well known on Broadway and drew in the crowds.

Show opens to a spangled traveler behind which Bernie's announcement comes via the big horn. The curtains then part disclosing the band and Bernie, who introduces "Keeping Company," which the band play as Pat Kennedy, band tenor, sings.

Remainder of program consists of playing and singing of popular tunes, each of which was enthusiastically received. The Albertina Rasch Girls (18) offer a snappy jazz routine which they do to the hot strains of "Mood Indigo." Five young colored boys, introduced by Bernie as his Sepian "Nephews," prove entertaining with their guitar playing, "harlem" singing and snappy dancing. Bernie, throughout the show injects his well known witticisms and stories and gets plenty laughs from the audience. The show closes with Bernie singing and talking his signature offering.

Irvin Talbot, conducting the Paramount orchestra in "Les Papillon," built up the overture into a production by using the Albertina Rasch girls on the stage in a most beautiful setting.

The feature picture this week is "My Sin," featuring Tallulah Bankhead and Fredric March.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending September 10

"The Park Band Concert," a prologue by the Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Glenn Welty, precedes Fanchon & Marco's "Dream House" Idea. Numbers include "Cute Little Things You Do," and "Roses of Picardy," both of which are sung by Orville Rennie.

With a house and brick wall as a background, the chorus attired in modern dress do their dance bit augmented by Masters and Gauthier. Song and dance patter includes "Moonlight Saving Time," and "Just a Little Dream House."

Masters and Gauthier clown, sing and dance. They offer "Wasting My Love on You," and "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams."

The next number by the chorus is representative of the spirit of a tree, with a tree for a background and the members attired in fitting leaf-like costumes. Featured in connection with this episode is Louise Glenn, who dances on her toes in a fascinating manner.

O'Donnell and Blair depict a duo of dizzy contractors. Their antics include falling over various objects, bumping into each other with planks and a series of other escapades.

Peg Leg Bates is back and gets the best hand on the bill with his dancing. He offers his usual "thank-you" address and an encore. The audience is pleased with his performance and he clicks.

The finale finds the dream house complete and the chorus attired in summery frocks dancing before it to the tune of "Ho-Hum." The remainder of the members fill in, including Masters and Gauthier and Louise Glenn.

Features Organ Solos

The RKO Albee, Cincinnati, has changed from three shows a day to four, featuring organ solos and with the inauguration of overtures by an enlarged orchestra of 15 musicians from the local union.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

Well, getting back from a nice quiet vacation and hustling around trying to say "hello" to everyone is sure some job but I love it. . . .

Let's see what news I have for you this week. Oh, yes . . . Do you know that Dave Schooler, piano virtuoso and well-known as a master of ceremonies is back at the Capitol theatre after an absence of more than eight months. In addition to playing a piano concerto in the current stage production, "Making Hey," Dave is actually convincing audiences of his prowess as a prestidigitator (conjuror to you). . . . "Big Shot" Charlie Gordon, Santly Brothers' "ace" floor man, sure put it over on a lot of patrons in one of the local drug stores recently when he went in and gave a lot of orders to the employees of the store. The laughable part of it was that some of the clerks didn't know just who he was and you should have seen them jump to do his orders. . . . Ruth Burr, former dancer for Fred Evans in Publix revues is gaining plenty popularity with her singing of rhythms and ballads over WABC and WMCA. . . . All of the time Ruthie was dancing in units she was studying voice and when her big opportunity came, she was ready for it. . . . Cliff Hess, special service man for Remick's tells the one about his little girl, Georgia, who certainly should get the prize for "Bright Sayings of Children," when, after listening to the lady next door, who had been practicing singing each morning for the past week, apparently couldn't stand it any longer, so went to her mother and said, "That girl next door sure has got a bad radio, hasn't she Mummy?" . . . Just got a line from Russell, our Chicago man. . . . He tells me that Milton Weil is publishing three numbers that are doing very well in Chi. . . . They are "That Little Boy of Mine," written by Benny Meroff, Wayne King and Walter Hirsch, "I'm Gonna Cover the Sun with Roses," by Ted Fiorito, Tommy Malie and Willard Herring and "Will You Wait in the Valley For Me," written by Johnny Burke and Walter Hirsch. . . .

One of the original girls with Jerry and Her Baby Grands, currently at Loew's State is back with her after earning quite a reputation out in the middle-west for her radio work. . . . Her name is Genevieve Herbert and at present she is visiting Louise M. Roesch, formerly with Jerry and now organist at the RKO Cameo. . . .

Gosh, I have plenty more to tell you, but there is no more room. . . . S'long. . . .

ED DAWSON

ORGAN SOLOS

BETTYE LEE TAYLOR (Schenectady RKO Proctors) in honor of the opening of the Plaza, the latest RKO theatre in this city, presented a specially written organ novelty titled "Neath Spanish Skies." Opening with special lyrics to the tune, "It Happened in Monterrey," the audience sang all of the verses dedicated to the new house. This was followed by Miss Taylor who offered solos of "Two Guitars," from Frankie and Johnnie; "La Paloma," "Spanish Doll," and "Dancing Tambourine." Each of these numbers was well played and each received a most gratifying reception. Solo closed with a special verse to "Dreams Come True," in which the organ was augmented by the entire orchestra.

Miss Taylor, who is very popular in this territory, gained herself a lot of new friends who were convinced that her unselfishness in plugging another house was the highest sign of showmanship.

MERLE CLARK and ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount) offered an entertaining solo called "Interruptions," in which Elsie, at the twin console, got a great hand for her singing of "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams." Merle opened the solo with his usual smart chatter and also a clever introduction to the song, "Makin' Faces at the Moon." This number was started by the audience six different times but after singing a few lines some different thing would interrupt them. At each interruption Merle would explain to the audience just what had caused it and would then suggest that they start anew. The final interruption was, supposedly from the manager, who requested the organists to play something else. Merle then led in the singing of "As Long as You're There," and followed and closed with "Nevertheless." The solo was well presented and proved highly entertaining to this audience.

NELSON SELBY (Buffalo Kensington) opened at this house with a solo titled, "Let's Get Friendly." Special lyrics to the tune, "Nevertheless," in which the organist said that he understood that this audience were good singers and that he hoped they would continue the good work for him. This they did, by singing the following choruses, "Million Dollar Baby," "Moon Comes Over the Mountain," "Just One More Chance," a special on "Whistling In the Dark," followed by a tongue twister that brought a very good hand in itself. The solo closed with a chorus of "Wanna Sing About You." The audience proved they were good singers and rewarded the new organist's efforts with a good round of applause.

ADA RIVES (Loew's State, New Orleans) takes a somewhat philosophical study of marital troubles in her comic organ slide solo, "Reno." Opening with a parody on "Little Gray Home In the West," for which the adjective "gay" is substituted for the color "gray," Miss Rives soon has the audience singing "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." This is followed by "It's Always Fair Weather," and then the divorce proceedings get under way with "Whoopee." When the final decree is rendered, the poor husband has to pay alimony, of course, but being a rather conscienceless mortal, he makes his check payable "On the Banks of the Wabash," whereupon the judge inquires "Would you Like to Take a Walk?" The close is "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." The audience sang most of the numbers.

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount). In honor of the Jewish holidays, Crawford presented "Eli Eli," appropriately presenting it by having Leon Kairoff sing in the native tongue. The number was beautifully played by Crawford and very well sung by Kairoff, both receiving an enthusiastic reception.

MILTON HERTH (Hammond Paramount) in honor of this theatre's First Anniversary presented an original novelty which he titled, "The Year in Song." The title slide, together with "1930-1931" were superimposed with a huge birthday cake, the candle of which was formed with letters spelling, "Paramount." After a parody, congratulating the audience for their co-operation, etc., several of the outstanding songs of the year, including a number of trick choruses, were offered for the audience to sing. Following this with an explanation that all of the songs of the year could not be sung, therefore he composed a special number Incorporating various song titles and played it to the tune, "Alone Because I Love You," and then had the audience sing the old "Happy Birthday" song. For the finish Herth played a specially written "thank you" chorus and "the melody of the year," "Waltz You Saved for Me." At the finish of this, a voice, coming apparently from the organ loft, explains that he, the Organ, should not be forgotten and that he wanted to sing a special song to Milt. This he (the Organ or voice), does, to the tune, "Many Happy Returns of the Day." Applause was so tremendous that Herth was forced to encore with "Just One More Chance."

BERNIE ARMSTRONG (Pittsburgh Stanley) has a clever and timely organlogue all about political wars. Inasmuch as a hot political campaign is being waged in Pittsburgh, Bernie capitalizes on the situation. His organ is covered with political cards and posters. He is dressed as a ward heeler, with loud striped suit, brown derby, cigar, and so on. His presentation is called "The Gang's All Here," and begins with a parody on "Sidewalks of New York." He plays several parodies and then does "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain" and "Little Girl." His finale is very clever, a parody on "Ain't Gonna Rain No More." The words to the parody include the names of practically all the local political aspirants, their names being arranged in pun fashion throughout the verses.

REX KOURY (Troy RKO Proctors) presented an entertaining community sing called "Flirting with Trouble," which was made up, mainly, of specially written parody verses and choruses. The solo consisted of specials on "Whistling in the Dark," "Tea for Two," "Walking Baby Back Home," "Swingin' in a Hammock," "Three O'clock In the Morning," and "Blue Again." Regular choruses of "When I Take My Sugar to Tea," "Now You're in My Arms," and "Through with Love." A clever story was interwoven throughout the novelty and Koury presented it in a showmanly manner.

AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) rose into view seated at the console playing the introduction to his "Radio Popularity Contest." As he played a slide he explained that most all have radios so he would give them a peek at the best entertainers. Colored pictures were flashed as different radio stars and their songs were introduced. First came Rudy Vallee with words flashed of "I Will Gather Stars." This was followed by Morton Downey, introduced as the golden voiced tenor with words on "Now You're in My Arms.'" Followed Kate Smith with words of "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain." After that Vincent Lopez with words to "Million Dollar Baby in a Five and Ten Cent Store." Hornig won very big applause.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum) at the console sang "Come to Me" by popular demand, following this with a most original and amusing impression of Deacon Lowdown's sermon on "Minnie the Moocher," with the orchestra taking the part of the choir. This was greeted with great applause.

JACK MARTIN at the Wisconsin (Milwaukee) organ offers "Your Part of the Program." He spurs on the audience through snappy remarks in singing "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile," "Nevertheless," "For You," "I'm Through With Love," and "I Found a Million Dollar Baby," words to all of which are flashed upon the screen.

MACK BRIDWELL (San Antonio RKO Majestic) recently offered the following late musical numbers as his organ solo: "Say a Little Prayer for Me," "I Wanna Sing About You," "You're the One I Care For," and for the final song slides gave a very good parody on the up-to-the-minute "Lazy River." Bridwell titled his solo "A Fountain of Melody."

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

I WAS MUCH INTERESTED IN THE list of shortwave stations published on page 15 of Motion Picture Herald for August 29. However, not all of these stations are actually in operation and many of them are rarely used on voice. I am therefore taking the liberty to pass along what information I have on the subject, and should you care for further details, I am sure the International Short Wave Club can supply them. They may be addressed at Klondyke, Ohio.

W6XN has been off the air as a relay station for a year and a communication from them tells me that it is a questionable matter whether they will resume.

The three W6XAL "stations" have, so far as I know, never gone on the air and last I heard were merely licences without a station. This Westminster, Cal., outfit is also listed as operating a BC station, but it exists in license only, although the call was in the call-books last winter.

W3XL is on 46.6 meters instead of 49.63 as listed.

W2XAC is rarely used on voice.

W2XAL on 25, 19 and 13 meters, W2XBR, W2XCX, W2XE on 19 meters, W3XAL on 31, 25, 19, 16 and 13 meters, W8XK on 31, 15, 16 and 13 meters, W9XAQ, W9XU and W9XF on 13 meters may all be operating, but I have never heard them, nor can have many other short-wave fans, for I correspond with short-wave fans all over the earth and follow all I can in the way of short-wave news, and I have never seen a report of reception of these stations.

The stations in your list which are regularly heard are:

W2XAD, W2XAF, W2XE on 49 meters (not shown in your list), W3XAL on 49.18 meters, W3XL on 46.6 meters, W8XAL on 49.5 meters, W8XK on 19.7, 25.25 and 48.86 meters, W9XF on 49.8 meters, and W3XAU.

I have seen reports of reception of W2XAL on 49 meters. W9XAA is temporarily off the air. W9XF and W9XAA have both been heard down around the 25 meter band with test programs, but this was apparently temporary. I just noticed W9XA listed. This is another station which apparently is not on the air, at least with voice, or as a relay station.

Trusting this may be of use to you.—W. Werner, Radio Editor, The San Diego Sun, San Diego, Cal.

Information Available

I HAVE YOUR LETTER OF THE 11TH of August, 1931, acknowledging the receipt of the remittance for the Motion Picture Almanac.

The usefulness of such a publication needs no emphasizing, containing as it does a fund of information which, so far as I am aware, is not elsewhere available.

The collating of so much data must have involved an enormous amount of time, and you and your Department are to be congratulated in helping the industry with the presentation of so much detail.

Generally, I find Quigley's publication most helpful as the information I desire is always readily available.—H. L. Webb, Secretary, Naval and Dockyard Cinema, Irland Island, Bermuda.

On Receipts and Pictures

I NOTE SEVERAL EXHIBITORS WRITing that the "Theatre Receipts" section does not mean a thing. I think they are right. In the August 22nd issue of the Herald, Metro's ad includes a statement that "Pardon Us" has just broken all records at Houston, Texas. Turning to Theatre Receipts page, I find that the receipts reported on "Pardon Us" are exactly one-third of the amount taken by "Trader Horn" at the same theatre. Something is wrong somewhere.

Mr. Hancock is right; there is, and always was, a demand for musical pictures in the small towns. I find that a musical number or two, especially those in color, go a long way toward making a picture enjoyable. J. C. hits the bell again when he says "Honeymoon Lane" is fine. It is one of those rare kind of pictures that you can show and then meet the patrons with a smile in the lobby as they leave. That is mighty rare these days. I have spent the past two weeks dodging behind the desk when the customers came out. Last week I had two features that were just about the poorest excuses for entertainment that I have seen in many days and they were both from Carl Laemmle, who is boasting about how he is delivering more than he promised. He certainly must not have promised much. "The Boudoir Diplomat" and "See America Thirst" will not only hurt business when they are run, but will hurt for many days afterward. Can you imagine eight reels of Harry Langdon and Slim Summerville slapstick comedy.

Then came a two-reel Paramount comedy, "He Was Her Man" with Gilda Gray doing a dance that shook four bricks out of the back wall of my show. The last time I saw a dance like this was in a "For Men Only Show" at a carnival. I never expected to see anything like it in movies for families. This is big city stuff and should be kept there.

"Strangers May Kiss" with Norma Shearer was very good and drew well. Very high class production and Miss Shearer and Neil Hamilton were fine, while Robert Montgomery scored the hit of the picture.

It doesn't seem possible for the same company to have produced two pictures like "Transatlantic" and "Goldie." "Transatlantic" is a real hit—something new and different and a high class production, while "Goldie" is just a bunch of film wasted. The answer is that "Goldie" is one of the last pictures on last year's contract and "Transatlantic" is one of the new contract "selling" pictures. It means that after they have put out a bunch of real high class, carefully produced features, the first three months, so as to sell their contracts, they fill out with a bunch of cheaply, carelessly produced pictures to make as much money as possible out of their pictures.

"Studio Sap"—Paramount 2-reel comedy—great comedy of the old style pie throwing variety. Lots of fun.

"Tarnished Lady"—very high class production. Many favorable comments on Miss Bankhead's acting and reliable Clive Brook is fine as usual. Story not much, but direction put it over. Musical background helped.

"East Lynne"—wonderful acting put this old favorite over. Drew fair and was well liked. Clive Brook, Conrad Nagel and Miss Harding fine.

"Cohens and Kellys in Africa"—did not please. Vulgar dialogue and cooch dancing not liked. Good at first, but gets tiresome.—L. L. Levy, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Texas.

Remakes a Bugaboo?

METRO HAS TAKEN ANOTHER OF the old silent pictures and made a talkie out of "Never The Twain Shall Meet," and it certainly misses fire as a box office attraction. It is hard to see just what is wrong with it, except that it drags and the cast overacts. Anyway, it did a "flop" at the box office, and it was not well received by the audience.

I do not know how these remade pictures go over in other spots, but without exception, every old silent picture that we have run that has been reproduced in sound has flopped. What the reason is, it is hard to tell.

"Never The Twain Shall Meet" has no action in it, it is all dialogue, and that is why so many are failing to draw at the box office. Metro no doubt put money into the production, but the picture should have been shelved and not released.

Fox's "A Holy Terror" is bang up good action picture, and you can lay to it a good story. Sally Eilers is good in the role she has; she can ride like nobody's business, and where you want action this is the picture. Well produced, a logical story, and none of overdrawn sequences that most of the cheaper Westerns have.

"Daddy Long Legs" (Fox)—You can play to this one with all you have. It will do business in any spot. Clean, clever and a good story, with Baxter at his best, as is also Janet Gaynor.

Now, another kind of picture that is as full of dirt as a picture can be and get by, suggestive in the extreme,—that is Metro's "Just a Gigolo." Haines is at his worst in this and he don't have to go much further to get you in bad with your audience. For the love of pete, don't play it on a Sunday. If you are wise, you will lay off.

I wonder where Hays was when this one was filmed. Sometimes, the spice is clever, and gets by, but this is not the case in "Just a Gigolo," and Metro is not doing Haines or the exhibitor any good in letting it come into towns such as these. Fortunately, the title was against it, and it did not do business, which is just as well.

"Young as You Feel" (Fox) with Will Rogers—A natural, and one of the best that Bill has done to date, and Fifi D'Orsay is immense as Bill's weak moment. These are the type of pictures audiences seem to want, and not the heavy dramatic stuff or smut.

"Son of India" (Metro), will get by. It is a better picture than "Daybreak," yet it does not come up to Navarro's "Pagan." The settings are lavish, but the photography is very dark, and you have some trouble getting the picture plain on the screen.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

A Thousand Uses

THANK YOU VERY MUCH FOR THE new edition of your invaluable Almanac. I found a thousand uses for your 1930 edition, and I am sure I shall find the 1931 edition just as useful. The painstaking care with which your staff has edited this volume is praiseworthy. — Dan Thompson, The Louisville Times, Louisville, Ky.

"Almanac" a Help

PLEASE ACCEPT MY APPRECIATIVE acknowledgment of the receipt of the Motion Picture Almanac of 1931.

The work is most complete, and is in highly attractive form. It is invaluable for reference.

Again expressing my gratitude for your courtesy, I am—CLARENCE BOYKIN, Richmond Times-Dispatch, Richmond, Va.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

NEARER AND NEARER

. . . comes the day when ultra-speed motion picture negative will eliminate slower emulsions. The latest impetus is supplied by the new gray backing on Eastman Super-sensitive. This advance is of particular interest to the exhibitor and the producer. Definitely improving photographic quality, it means more artistic, more pleasing, more satisfying pictures. And these factors, needless to say, have a very definite box-office value. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

LEO'S DIARY!

SEPTEMBER 22 –

Looked in at the Astor theatre today. Standees for "The Guardsman" at $2. very nice! Lunt & Fontanne are swell. My idea of showmanship is to give the folks new ideas, new faces. I think I'm right. Just picked up copies of Hollywood picture dailies and saw the rave notices on "New Adventures of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" the reviewers say it's the best Bill Haines show since "Slide Kelly Slide." And they say Jimmy Durante, the Broadway comic is a scream. Listen Diary, you'll hear plenty about that Durante guy! He's going to pull a Clark Gable – overnight sensation! I'm still chuckling over Buster Keaton's gags in "Side-walks of New York." When I saw the notices from the Coast I figured it couldn't be that good. Then I saw it in the projection room. It's great! I'm so pleased to see Joan Crawford's "This Modern Age" going over so big. Two fine weeks at the Capitol, N.Y! An exhibitor writes me to say that if it hadn't been for M-G-M in past months he'd be out of business today. I think that's true of plenty of other theatres!

SHOWS OR SAUSAGES

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

In an industry which has had a brilliant record for initiative, enterprise and progressiveness, the opening of the 1931-32 theatrical season in the picture business is alarmingly disappointing.

The heart of the picture business always has been and always will be—showmanship. Without showmanship the picture business becomes a cut-and-dried process of manufacturing and distribution, of little importance to the public and of little profit to the industry.

And that, precisely, has been the drift of affairs in the picture business during recent months.

Showmanship covers a wide field of activity. Its essentials are more or less involved in every personal and commercial success in the modern world. In many lines of commercial and industrial activity it is a desirable and highly advantageous addition to the normal routine. In the motion picture industry it is the essence of the business.

Showmanship in its practical application ranges all the way from the pungent spieling of the medicine-show barker to the elaborate preparations that are lavished upon a trans-continental tour of a presidential candidate. Somewhere within that range lie the activities which must be the regular and routine pursuits of the business of motion pictures which undertakes to prepare and to supply the predominant form of amusement to the public.

The picture business at this time gives evidence of a combination of self-satisfaction and a fatalistic assumption that things are as they are, and there is nothing to be done about it!

In the place of intense activity, contagious optimism and an uncompromising determination to occupy a place in the sunlight of popular interest and industry precedence, there is in various places in the trade only a supine attitude which, among other things, suggests that the tide of affairs is not unlikely in the near future to bring in a number of new names and new faces to take the places of those who have gone into a decline in so far as their usefulness to the business is concerned.

There is little doubt that the efforts to impersonalize a business in which personality counts most is an important contributing factor in the present disturbing state of affairs. The widespread efforts which have been made to regimentalize company personnels and to achieve vast, impersonal organizations which were supposed to function with machine-like precision have, unfortunately, been too successful. There are many evidences of orderly, machine-like operation; in many, too many, because in most cases it has resulted in a condition of motion without movement.

The industry did suffer during the past season from a lack of a sufficient number of good pictures. But the lack of appropriate showmanship efforts on good pictures results in practically the same conditions as those brought about through a lack of good pictures. And that exactly is what is happening in the case of most of the good pictures that are now available. The old showmanship efforts to enthuse and inspire the trade, thereby making the arrival of a good picture an event, have been suspended or forgotten. The old efforts to stimulate the trade's interest and thereby communicate interest and enthusiasm to the public, through the trade's thousands of direct contacts with the public, are conspicuously absent.

Perhaps in the old days of the industry's so-called infancy it did appear as an irrepressible, voracious youth in the eyes of staid and stereotyped Business but it did get results—vastly more and greater results than it is now getting. Perhaps it did conduct itself as if the late P. T. Barnum was its patron saint but while it did so it was storing up assets upon which it is now having grave difficulty in paying savings banks' interest returns.

THE BEGINNINGS OF RADIO CITY

The first step—present buildings razed, steam shovels eating out the earth for the excavations—in the making of the great Rockefeller-RCA amusement center in New York, to cover the three blocks from 48th to 51st streets, between Fifth and Sixth avenues. This site is the subject of the largest single mortgage loan ever placed on real estate, the amount being $65,00,000. This financing was effected by the sale to the Metropolitan Life Insurance company of bonds in serial form, to be sold as the project progresses. The aerial view above shows its stage of development today. Another day, a group of imposing structures.

TIFFANY WON'T BAR CANCELLATION OF ALLIED CONTRACT BY EXHIBITOR

Studios Are Alienating Press By Arrogance of Executives

By TERRY RAMSAYE

In its attitude toward the press, Hollywood is playing "hard to get." Now it is an axiom of the American newspaper code that when you "play hard to get," they "get you good."

The motion picture industry depends for public good will very considerably upon the state of mind enjoyed by hardly more than a score of Hollywood reporters and correspondents. The production community, through the decision of a handful of executives, by strictures and rules governing access to the studios and players, has contrived seriously to embarrass and estrange these agents of the public.

There is no question that, under the old wide open policy of years gone by, there were invasions of studio efficiency, but the lid has been put on with that unthinking zeal which seems to accompany all acts of prohibition.

One may concede without question the ability of the masters of the Hollywood production plants to make pictures, but there is none of them that I would nominate to a post in the diplomatic service or consider in the capacity of public relations counsel.

It would be, with an adequate understanding, possible for Hollywood to do a magnificent selling job in behalf of the motion picture institution. It is doing a conspicuous unselling job. The makers of entertainment for the great commonalty can ill afford arrogance. Their courtesy could be made charmingly effective if it were not reserved exclusively for persons whom they fear.

About ten men are responsible for the fact that the word Hollywood, in the lexicons of many writers, is evolving into an adjective of mockery.

There is a fine spun theory, of many years standing, that all news about motion pictures and picture affairs is to be collected at studios and shipped in thermos flasks to the New York home offices for decanting to the public, concurrent with the release of pictures concerned. Nothing of the sort really obtains. The collectors and purveyors of news go where it happens and dig for it. The deeper they have to dig for it, the more dirt they toss up with the ore.

Hollywood could do with an introduction to the United States. A study of the map and Ayer's annual directory of newspapers would be, or should be, enlightening. A Hollywood or Los Angeles opening and a piece in the local papers, valuable as it may be, is not exactly telling the world. Oskaloosa and Smith's Corners are not to be impressed by the sunlight arcs and the rose petal confetti with which Hollywood kids itself and its hired hands.

It is constructively suggested that makers of pictures concentrate their attention upon certain black and white effects to be recorded on strips of thirty-five millimeter film and that they entrust matters pertaining to relations with the public to persons who have the ability and the time to admix a shade of common politeness and judgment with their efficiency.

Further, the suggestion is made that the motion picture should by now have outgrown the pimply self-consciousness of adolescence and that it is not to consider itself indicted whenever any individual picture or any individual act of production is made the subject of adverse comment.

The American Publishers' Association is not outraged when magazine writers take a merry fling at Bernarr MacFadden's "Graphic," The American Bankers Association does not froth and pass resolutions when a banker is exposed and sent to jail for defalcations. But Hollywood has repeatedly invited wholesale indictment by engaging in whitewashing campaigns for bad boys and girls.

Hollywood's endeavor to cover up sends the reporters to the headwaiters, the hotel clerks, and janitors and the backstairs help. They get the story eventually, and the pages of the press today repeatedly prove that when they go out to get them they "get them good."

Even the hidebound managements of railroads and traction companies, years ago, learned better practise than that.

The customer is always right. The customer of the motion picture is the American public, and the public, through the press, employs reporters to purvey the news of the world's greatest entertainment and the community in which it is made.

Average Rental for Group Below Open Market

Theatre Owners Not Intending to Continue Won't Play Anyway, Say Hammons and Saal

Tiffany will not stand in the way of cancellation of the Tiffany-Allied feature franchise contract by any theatre owner who is desirous of discontinuing the agreement.

E. W. Hammons, president, and William Saal, executive of Educational-Tiffany, in a joint statement made exclusively to Motion Picture Herald, stated on Wednesday that "If any exhibitor wants to cancel his franchise it is agreeable with us. The theatre owner who does not intend to continue will not play these features anyway. The necessity of prosecution is negligible."

Will Continue Service

It was pointed out by Saal that, technically, the agreement was violated by Tiffany prior to that company's acquisition by Educational several months ago, when Tiffany failed to deliver the full complement of 26 features called for in 1930-31, the first season of the agreement with Allied members. About 17 of a minimum of 26 were delivered.

However, Tiffany will continue to service those theatres which continue under the contract, and while the company, according to both Saal and Hammons, has no desire to encourage cancellations, it will offer no objections to those so desiring.

The blanket agreement with Allied, which still has four years to run, does not benefit the national Allied treasury, but does give exhibitors a break in rentals inasmuch as the average scale for an entire season's group runs lower than the average rental obtained by the company on the open market. This, it is understood, is a highly unfavorable phase of the agreement insofar as Tiffany is concerned.

Buy on Point Basis

Exhibitors buy the product on a point basis which is figured on location and size of the house and the amount spent on production of each individual production. It does not give the company the opportunity to barter with franchise holders on the open market, which, it is said, causes a lower gross on pictures which have strong box office appeal.

While neither Saal nor Hammons would discuss the present field status of franchise holders, it is known that considerable trouble has faced Tiffany managers in ironing out contractual difficulties with scores of theatre owners.

Richard Rowland, who recently joined the Fox organization, is scheduled to depart Monday for Hollywood on a mission concerned with production. He may remain on the coast for several weeks.

TWO NATIONAL THEATRE CIRCUITS WILL SHOW ONLY 16 mm. PICTURES

RCA Preparing to Enter Home Film Field

Thousand Silents and 400 Sound Pictures Are Available, Says Secretary of Convention

Plans for establishment of two national circuits of theatres using 16 mm. silent and talking pictures exclusively were announced at the first convention and trade exhibit of the 16 mm. motion picture industry at the Hotel Victoria, New York, this week.

Frank Mavity, formerly of Fox Theatres, heads an organization which opened the first of a national circuit of the small theatres this week. The theatre is known as the Juvenile Playhouse and is located at 52 East 78th Street, New York. Mavity and Joseph Flaherty, an associate, have in mind sites for additional theatres throughout the country, according to A. B. V. Storey, secretary of the 16 mm. Motion Picture Board of Trade.

Exchanges Also Planned

A second circuit of small theatres which will use only 16 mm. film also is planned by another organization, the identity of the backers of which was not revealed, convention officials announced.

A number of 16 mm. film exchanges also are planned for stategically located cities throughout the country, Storey said. The first of these was opened recently at 902 Broadway, New York, with M. H. Schoenbaum, formerly with Pathe's sub-calibre film department, in charge.

RCA is preparing itself for an entrance into the home picture field with 16 mm. sound on film productions. Although representatives of the company were reluctant to discuss their plans, describing them as still in the experimental stage, it was learned that RCA expects to have a 16 mm. product ready for the market in about 60 days.

RCA To Use Acetate Base

It is understood that RCA's 16 mm. sound-on-film will be, like others now on the market, on acetate base, instead of the nitro-cellulose employed in the 35 mm. theatrical film stock. Technically, the film is known as "safety stock," and being of non-inflammable composition, may be used without fireproof projection booths or licensed operators, as are required for the projection of 35 mm. film. In addition, any amount of the acetate base stock may be stored in projection booths, as the fire prevention regulations governing handling, storing and shipping of 35 mm. stock do not apply to the 16 mm. film. These factors are regarded as being highly advantageous to the commercial development of the 16 mm. production and exhibition industry.

In general, more than 1,000 silent productions and 400 sound pictures, ranging from one to 11 reels in length, are available for 16 mm. projectors, Storey said. He estimated that more than 100 manufacturers now are serving the 16 mm. industry, and that 400,000 projectors for 16 mm. film have been sold in the United States to date. He estimates that fully 250,000 amateurs have their own 16 mm. cameras.

Seventeen manufacturers exhibited product at the convention.

Leading producers are now supplying the 16 mm. field with pictures in the form of reduced editions of their best theatrical product with leading stars in the casts. Paramount, Pathe, Columbia, Fitzpatrick, Universal and other producers are serving this field.

A new development of significance in the home picture industry is seen in the introduction of home projection apparatus on the market by 24 manufacturers. Arrangements are being made at the convention for the supplying of dealers with 16 mm. pictures for rental to the large numbers who are expected to purchase this new home picture equipment.

Although radio dealers are in a position to command the bulk of the retail trade in home projection machines, one of the endeavors of the convention, according to Storey, is to interest the present 16 mm. film libraries and the new 16 mm. film exchanges in handling the home projection sets as well.

Exhibitors Seek Adjustment of Employees' Pay

Adjustment of theatre employees' wages to effect a fair and proportionately equalized standard of compensation for all workers will be sought in negotiations which exhibitors will attempt in the near future with representatives of the American Federation of Labor.

Many exhibitors are of the opinion that the disparity in wages paid theatre employees is not commensurate with the value of the work performed by the various divisions of employees. Their plan is to seek the approval of organized labor for reductions in wages of the highly paid employees, these reductions to apply on increases in the salaries of the more poorly paid employees' divisions.

Strenuous objections to the adjustments are expected to come from operators who, in the event the plan were inaugurated, would be required to take the largest reductions inasmuch as they are the highest paid class of theatre labor. Proponents of the plan, however, are prepared to show the international organization the merits of the plan, it is said.

The New York offices of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and the American Federation of Musicians stated the plan had not yet been broached to them.

Report a $1,000,000 Circuit Planned in North of England

London reports a new circuit deal, which, if it materializes, will probably lead to one of the largest circuits in England. $1,000,000 is mentioned as the purchase price. Harry Buxton, who already owns 17 houses, is the leading figure in the reported deal.

There are about 15 new houses concerned in the potential circuit, which will be located in the north of England.

The first local organization of the new club group has been established at the newest house in the circuit, the Fox, in Spokane, Wash.

RCA ANTI-TRUST ACTION MAY BE SETTLED WITHOUT COURT TRIAL

50 Fox Theatres Set for Transfer In Skouras Deal

Transfer of close to fifty Fox theatres to Spyros Skouras neared consummation yesterday as final details were being ironed out on future protection, particularly concerning the existing Loew-Paramount agreement.

Theatres involved include several upstate New York houses, all Long Island runs, the remaining Fox stands in Brooklyn which Rinzler & Frisch did not purchase, with the exception of the de luxe Fox Brooklyn; all New York City houses operated by Fox, excluding the Roxy, but including, among others, the Audubon, Academy of Music and several in the Bronx; and northern New Jersey Fox units.

The deal, which the Mike Comerford Pennsylvania interests had originally participated in, later withdrawing, is expected to find the entire Fox theatre staff at houses involved in the deal joining Skouras.

Erpi Now Active In the Hotel Field

Fifty hotels, widely scattered throughout the country, have been equipped with Western Electric sound devices, in line with the electric's drive to concentrate on non-theatrical installations now that the theatrical field nears the saturation point.

Because RCA Photophone has concentrated more on other non-theatrical phases, its business with hostelries is negligible.

Anticipated trouble with theatre owners over sales to hotels has not materialized, in view of the non-existence of competition to exhibitors which many operators originally thought would develop.

The hotels place their apparatus at the disposal of business houses, conventions, social functions, Lions, Kiwanis and Rotary meetings.

Universal on New Wage Scale

Home office, exchange and studio personnel of Universal started this week on the increased wage scale, following decision of Carl Laemmle last week to restore a previously made salary reduction.

Follows the Agreement On Suit by 21 Companies

End of Litigation Makes Radio Tube Available to Independent Firms, Says Sarnoff

Following closely upon the announcement this week that the Radio Corporation of America has amicably settled the $47,500,000 triple damage suits brought against it in the United States district court in Wilmington, Del., by 21 independent radio companies, the United States government anti-trust suit filed against RCA may be settled outside of court, indications are.

When Judge John P. Nields reviewed the civil calendar in court two weeks ago Charles F. Curley, one of the Wilmington representatives of RCA asked that the case be continued. It is understood that another of a series of conferences looking toward a settlement of the suit will be held next week in New York.

Out of these conferences is expected to come an agreement on an open patent pool for the benefit of the entire radio industry in which RCA and other important radio patent holders will join. Side by side with the government's charges against RCA goes the growing sentiment in legal circles for modification of the anti-trust laws.

The government suit charges RCA with having maintained a monopoly on the radio tube industry through its controls of the patents with other corporations in a closed patent pool.

Denial that RCA had attempted to acquire a controlling interest in De Forest Radio Company incidental to the settlement of litigation over vacuum tube patents involving 21 independent tube manufacturers, is made by Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, vice president of RCA.

The settlement, according to David Sarnoff, president of RCA, makes radio tube rights available to all independent manufacturers under equally advantageous conditions, and access also will be given to De Forest patents, rights to which have been obtained by the Radio Corporation.

The litigation originated over clause 9 of the contracts with set manufacturers which stipulated that all receiving sets must be equipped with RCA tubes. It was this clause which the litigants charged was in violation of the Clayton anti-trust act.

The companies included in the settlement with RCA are De Forest Radio Company, Mellotron Tube Co., Vesta Battery Co., Van Horne Co., Schickerling Products Corp.; Gold Seal Electric Co., Universal Electric Lamp Co., Continental Corporation, the Sunlight Lamp Co., Marvin Radio Tube Corp., Radex Corp., Globe Electric Co., Arcturus Radio Tube Co., Duratron Radio Tube Corp., Gold Seal Manufacturing Co., Supertron Manufacturing Co., Cleatron Vacuum Tube Co., Diamond Radio Tube Co., and the Poughkeepsie Gold Seal Co.

Theatres Deserted As Legionnaires Meet in Detroit

Pavement and parlor games devised by 100,000 Legionnaires during the 13th annual convention of the American Legion held in Detroit this week apparently provided more suitable entertainment than that offered by the theatres of the city. In spite of the crowds, downtown houses were practically deserted throughout the week, but the Legionnaires, regardless, did not go unentertained.

Special stage and orchestral presentations devised for the Fox Michigan and Fisher theatres and featuring war-time songs, military costumes, and war shots on the screens, drew few of the visiting Legionnaires. The bulk of them were to be found, instead, in the street parades which wound endlessly through Detroit, at the Water Carnival staged at Belle Isle, at night time football games, at Windsor, Ontario and Ecorse, in hotel rooms and at big league baseball games. Weather during the week was ideal for the outdoor attractions, and partially explains the unwillingness of the crowds to include theatres in their entertainment itinerary.

Street crowds were orderly, for the most part, although some annoyance was caused departing theatre patrons in the downtown area when they were drenched by water-filled paper bags tossed from hotel windows. No storming of theatres was reported, but one downtown house took the precaution of removing all lose bric-a-brac and furniture from lobbies and rest rooms.

Industry Observing Fair's Possibilities

Will H. Hays' trip to Chicago this week was not for the purpose of definitely lining up the motion picture industry at the World's Fair, to be held there in 1933, but rather to study exhibition possibilities and for observation of space requirements in case it is decided to have the industry represented at the event.

Chaplin Keeps Only Reeves at Studio

Charles Chaplin, from London, has ordered the entire studio staff in Hollywood laid off indefinitely, with the exception of Alfred Reeves, manager. Reeves was not advised when Chaplin will return or what his plans are.

The permanent layoff includes several veteran employees of more than ten years service at the studio.

IT'S STRANGE SECRECY IN $50,000,000 BATTLE

Hectic Sessions Continue in Warner-Western Electric Royalty Issue—Executives Speak Not

With a vast secrecy and a vast dignity befitting a fifty million dollar controversy, the arbitrators of the royalty contract controversy between Warner Brothers and Western Electric this week continued to sit in hectic sessions of strange hours closeted in an office looking down into the financial canyons about 195 Broadway.

At the offices of Warners, the Telephone Company, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, executives sat with pursed lips and solemn mein, repeating in turn that a "gentlemen's agreement" had been made to maintain silence concerning the controversy and its progress.

While the royalty contract, drawn up in the days before either Warners, the Western Electric or anyone else knew what sound pictures were to become, provides for a compulsory arbitration, it is to be taken as more than obvious that neither party will likely accept as final anything but the judgment from the last and highest possible legal resort.

The sessions of the week have been taken up with an elaborate array of exhibits and reports, variously submitted, and testimonies from George Quigley, of Warners, an early figure in the Vitaphone organization, Abel Carey Thomas, secretary of Warners, and Whitford Drake, a vice president of Western Electric, who has come on from Los Angeles to appear in behalf of his company.

An extraordinary sensitivity to public interest in the arbitration has been evidenced on all sides, more especially in the higher offices of Western Electric and Erpi. "The controversy will not be fought in the press." exclaimed John F. Otterson, vice president of ERPI.

In terms of money the Warner-Western conflict is the biggest litigation in the entire history of the motion picture and is big enough to be a landmark in the whole of the annals of American industry. An ultimate decision for Warners would be likely to be followed by far reaching sequels in both organizations. Fifty million dollars of difference cannot be classified as a clerical error.

Giannini to Stay At Bank of America

Status of Dr. A. H. Giannini at Bank of America goes unchanged. He remains as the guiding spirit of the national institution, which for a period of years has been an important factor in motion picture production financing. Location of Giannini's headquarters, however, are yet to be determined. He may center his activities on the West Coast, transferring from New York.

Speculation over Giannini's future developed when Lee, Higginson & Co. entered the Transamerica Corporation, which resulted in divorcement of the latter holding company from control of its banks and replacement of A. P., Lawrence M. and A. H. Giannini on the Transamerica board.

The trend in modern banking today is to divorce holding companies from the banks with which they are affiliated, in order to avert damage to such controlled banks in the event stock market fluctuations reduce the value of securities handled by the holding companies. To that end there has developed a practice which considers it inadvisable for the same officer or director to sit on the board of a bank and holding company at the same time. This is the reason for the withdrawal of Dr. Giannini from the Transamerica board, on which he has been a member for only two years, in favor of the Bank of America, of which he has been guiding spirit for a considerably longer period of time.

Score Charges On Way Out, Vincent Tells Exhibitors

Two hundred exhibitors cheered Walter Vincent when he predicted at the closing session of the annual MPTO meeting in Philadelphia on Thursday that "sky high" percentages are due to come down and that score charges are on the way out. Vincent, chairman of the Metro National Protest Meeting in New York, addressed the members of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware.

He reported no definite modification in the selling plan of M-G-M, which gave rise to the protest meeting in New York, after conferences with Felix Feist, M-G-M sales manager, but said he had gained Feist's promise of co-operation.

Jay Emanuel, Philadelphia exhibitor-publisher, voiced disapproval of the demand of United Artists for a 50-50 split on the Eddie Cantor film, "Palmy Days." David Barrist in effect repeated the protest noted at the Metro meeting with regard to the necessity of deflating Hollywood, criticising the film center's alleged policy of superfluous expenditure.

On Friday, following Thursday's closing session, a golf tournament was scheduled, sponsored by The Exhibitor, and attended by numerous New York executives, who went down from New York for the closing session of the unit meeting. The tournament was to be held at the Lu Lu Country Club.

Arliss Due October 1

George Arliss is expected to return to the United States on October 1, proceding directly to Hollywood to start his next Warner film, adapted from Clare Kummer's play, "A Successful Calamity."

MGM Protest Unit Asks Elimination Of Score Charge

Assailing the score charge and asking its immediate elimination by all companies, the continuing committee appointed by the Metro National Protest meeting adjourned after a brief session late this week. Further meetings of the continuing committee are scheduled for next week.

The committee's report on score charges termed them "an evil fastened upon the exhibitors at the beginning of the sound picture era because of a lack of understanding on the part of both producers and exhibitors as to the necessity therefor."

The committee reported further that "whereas it is convinced that all score charges are unfair, it feels that the score charge on pictures played on percentage is the greater evil, in view of the fact that under the percentage agreement the producer-distributor and the theatre owner establish a partnership, and, therefore, neither partner should, after the terms of such partnership have been established, expect an edge not contemplated under the terms of the contract."

Additional Attacks Made

In accordance with the report, all producer-distributors were requested by the committee to eliminate all score charges on pictures played on percentage at once.

Additional attacks on percentage playing were made during the week by Allied Theatres of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, which took a stand against percentage and overage contracts at its recent convention. The organization issued a warning to members that their theatres would be checked by Ross Federal Checking Bureau in the event they signed percentage and overage contracts.

Advance reports on the convention of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, on October 6, indicate that percentage playing and zoning will be major topics of discussion, with a stand against the former by the meeting considered likely.

RKO Theatres Targets

RKO theatres were made the target of an attack by independents of Northern New Jersey when an RKO house at New Brunswick took steps to obtain an increase in protection over second-runs from 14 days to 30 days. Subsequent runs in the territory effected would also be set back 16 additional days if the RKO theatre's demands were complied with.

Indicating the probable flexibility with which Metro intends to apply its 1931-32 contract are deals closed recently with Baltimore independent operators. J. Louis Rome, manager of the Associated Theatres; Joe Brodie, owner of the Brodie theatre in South Baltimore, and the Aldine, a neighborhood house at East Baltimore, have all closed for Metro product. Baltimore exhibitors are of the opinion that the deals indicate that Metro is closing contracts on a percentage basis which permits the exhibitor an unquestioned profit, although terms of the deals were not made known.

EXHIBITORS CARRY ZONING APPEAL TO MPPDA AFTER HERALD SURVEY

Three Versions of "Squaw Man" Outline Progress of the Art

"THE SQUAW MAN" in its current engagement at the Capitol is playing its fifth Broadway premiere. An interesting history closely knit with the development of the motion picture art lies in the background of this production. "The Squaw Man" was originally written by Edwin Milton Royle in 1904 as a one act playlet and it was originally presented at a Lambs Gambol in New York. A year later he made a full length play of it, opening in Toledo October 11, 1905, and coming thence to Wallack's in New York. William Faversham was starred and William S. Hart, George Fawcett and the late Theodore Roberts, all later to become motion picture names, were in the cast.

It was in 1913 that Cecil DeMille and Jesse Lasky acquired the motion picture rights for $5,000, for their first venture with the new-born Lasky concern. The late Dustin Farnum was cast for the leading role in the picture and preferred $5,000 cash to a quarter interest in the company. The picture brought a telegram of approval to Mr. Lasky from Adolph Zukor, who had just a few months before seen the vision of feature length pictures. The telegram led to a luncheon at the old Delmonico's and in time to the Famous Players-Lasky company, the parent of the Paramount Publix of now. In 1917, with the progress of the art to encourage him, Mr. DeMille made "The Squaw Man" again.

Now in the new world of the talking picture "The Squaw Man" is new once more.

The three motion picture versions, all made by the same man, the gifted Mr. DeMille, present to the serious student of the art of the motion picture an extraordinary opportunity to examine into the development of technique on the screen, and most interestingly to observe how stage lines were converted into pantomime, how pantomime improved in a second version, and how, in turn, the greater scope of the talking screen has given to the picture as a drama of words and action of breadth beyond the power of the stage for which the story was primarily conceived. It should be the obligation of some custodian of the archives of the art to preserve copies of each version. Once again the importance of the early establishment of a motion picture museum is indicated. The institution of the motion picture, which is ever so self-consciously in the market for kudos and public esteem, has here an opportunity, which it seems is not to be appreciated for some decades yet. Pioneers seldom esteem history.

Woodhull Heads Advertiser Sales

R. F. (Pete) Woodhull, former president of the MPTOA, is now vice president and general sales manager for United Theatre Advertisers, Inc.

R. F. Woodhull

Walter J. Stein, president of the company, in announcing the appointment, referred to Woodhull's "twenty-five years of experience in the actual management of theatres and theatrical enterprises."

"The best picture shown in perfect condition means little or nothing if not vividly and properly brought to the attention of the public," Woodhull said. "Hence the importance of the exploitation element in this big job."

More Zoning Suits Faced in Nebraska

"Present indications are that there will be several additional cases filed against distributors on zoning, unless the situation is clarified" in Omaha territory, according to Lester F. Martin, secretary-treasurer of Allied Theatre Owners of Nebraska, who, in an exclusive statement to MOTION PICTURE HERALD, takes exception to published reports that the Omaha territory is functioning smoothly with regards protection and zoning activities.

"Allied Theatre Owners of Nebraska are opposed to protection," Martin said, "between towns as drafted and submitted for consideration and hereby reject the same." This is the phraseology of a resolution adopted by Allied of Nebraska last January.

Hays Office Acts This Week In Several Situations

New Orleans and Cleveland Indicated Among First to Receive Attention in Cleanup

Numerous requests from exhibitors in many key situations for aid in establishing uniform zoning and protection systems have been received by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America following publication in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week of the results of a national survey on the protection situation. The investigation revealed that protection is administered in haphazard fashion in a majority of keys and that resultant protests threaten legal and legislative action in several situations. It also showed that in the few cities wherein uniform zoning and protection plans are in effect general satisfaction exists among exhibitors.

Hays Office Ready to Act

In answer to the requests from exhibitors for aid in establishing uniform protection plans in their territories, the Hays office will take action in several situations this week where exhibitors are reported ready to negotiate new systems. Although it was not revealed in which cities the zoning conferences would begin, with representatives of the Hays office acting as intermediaries, it was indicated that New Orleans and Cleveland may receive early attention from proponents of uniform zoning plans. The situation in both cities is regarded as critical.

Price differences in New Orleans, radically separating first-runs from subsequents, are said to have created an urgent need for a uniform plan there. Cleveland exhibitors are threatening legal action against operators of first-run houses unless protection adjustments are made at once.

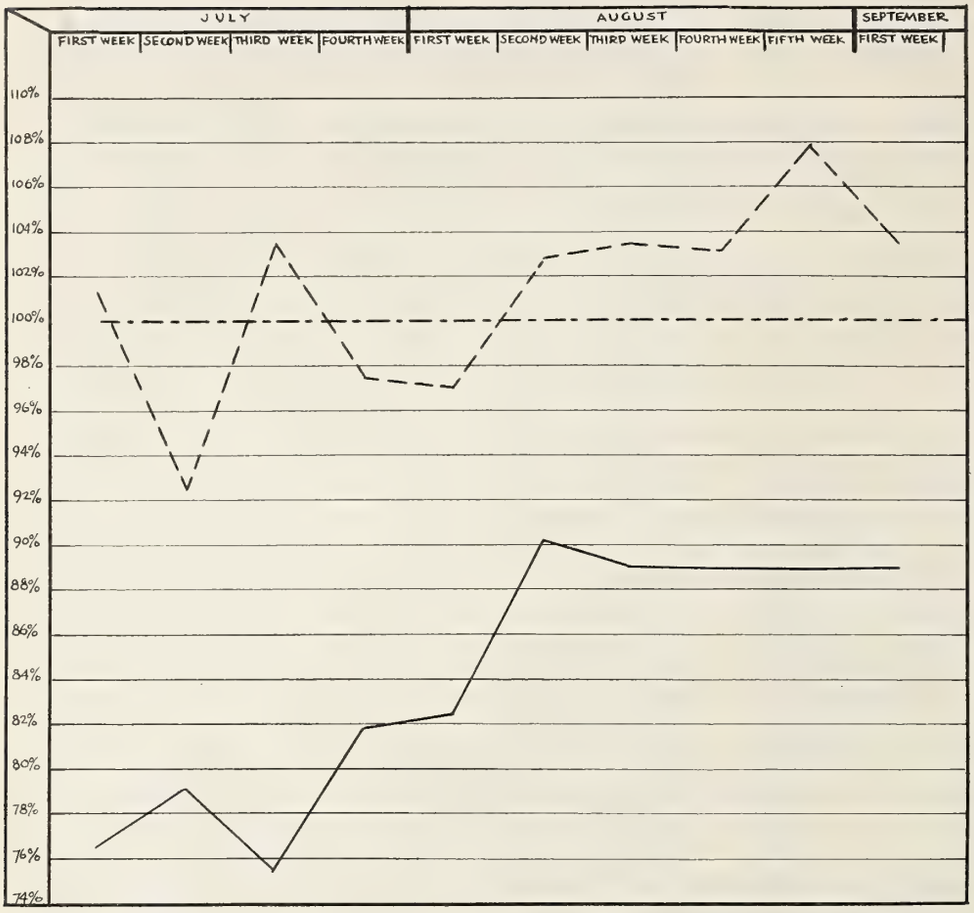
Other Situations Called Critical

Other situations regarded as critical are at Kansas City, Omaha, Milwaukee, Los Angeles and Chicago, where haphazard administration of local protection plans is meeting with widespread dissatisfaction among exhibitors.

The Hays office will participate in zoning conferences only where requested to do so by local exhibitors and distributors, according to Dave Palfreyman of the MPPDA.

"We are ready to assist in several situations where requests for our aid have already been received," Palfreyman said. "In each instance the Hays office will act only as the medium in bringing zoning plans approved by local exhibitors and exchanges before home office authorities for approval. Our first participation in new zoning conferences may come this week."

The Department of Justice has indicated that the adoption of "fair and reasonable uniform protection systems" equitably arrived at are not to be considered illegal.



The above chart shows a comparison of box-office receipts per seat in sixteen cities of the United States and Canada from July first to the first week in September, for 1930 and 1931. The unbroken line represents receipts in 1931, July to September. The evenly broken line (– – –) shows receipts in 1930 for the same period, while the unevenly broken line (— – — – —) represents the average receipts for the year 1930.

STEFFES UNAWARE OF MILLION DOLLAR FUND

Saperstein Likewise Denies Any Knowledge of Treasury to Back Battle for One-Man-in-Booth

Aaron Saperstein, Allied president in Illinois, and Al Steffes, of Allied's national exhibitor body, this week made denials to MOTION PICTURE HERALD of having any knowledge of the creation of a reported $1,000,000 defense fund through which independent theatre owners would fight projestionists on the one-man-in-the-booth battle which now is waging throughout the entire country.

It is expected that projector operators will use legislative appeals to curb the reduction of booth personnel, and it is to fight these union efforts that exhibitors are supposed to have launched a national fund at Chicago.

Although Allied members at Chicago contribute weekly to a fund for use in the situation in that territory, Illinois legislators last May defeated a measure which would prohibit a reduction to one operator. Similar bills have also been killed in other Midwestern states.

Union leaders in projection circles base their plea to legislators on the fact that one man in a booth is a fire hazard and the reduction automatically jeopardizes the lives of theatregoers. They ask legislation to prohibit this.

Wisconsin to Resume Meetings

Regional meetings for the MPTO of Wisconsin will get under way in October, according to Fred S. Meyer, president. The first meeting is expected to be held in La-Crosse, a definite date not yet having been set.

Advice!

A published advertisement, signed by J. J. Harwood, president of Cleveland Exhibitors Association, is headed "GOOD ADVICE," and admonishes exhibitors, "Get back into the show business. Cut out the double features, two-for-one admissions and premiums and START SELLING PICTURES!"

Echoes of That UA-MGM Merger Heard Abroad

Rumors of a merger between United Artists and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which have been heard over a two-year period, and which during the past few months have gained more than passing interest in the trade here, this week were the cause of much discussion in London film circles, where they were flatly denied by Murray Silvertone, U. A. chief in Great Britain.

"Why should there be a merger?" Silverstone stated in pointing out that "United Artists have just booked their entire output to every circuit in America—a total of between 4,000 and 5,000 theatres, besides to independents bringing the total up to 11,000 to 12,000."

Silverstone's statement would have one believe that the new 1931-32 United Artists' line-up has already been bought by all but a few thousand theatres in the entire country.

Silverstone indicated that Chaplin's "City Lights" had grossed $1,000,000 to date in England.

Conn Suing RKO And Theatre In Own Trust Case

Jacob Conn, Providence exhibitor, and one of the leaders in the fight against control of Pathe assets by RKO, is suing RKO for alleged combination in restraint of trade. In addition to that company, Conn has named the Royal theatre, Olneyville, an opposition house. He claims the defendants conspired to shut off RKO service to his theatre.

At the time of the Pathe sale, Conn led in denouncing Joseph P. Kennedy and other Pathe officers, charging they had double-crossed the company in selling its assets to RKO. He made a trip to Washington in an effort to secure the cooperation of the Department of Justice in stopping the sale.

A published estimate of how America spends its money indicates that those people with the lowest incomes, spend most for food, while those with the greatest incomes spend most for housing. Miscellaneous, which also includes amusement, rates high, in the case of the higher incomes being the largest figure, ranking above food, clothing, housing and furniture.

SARNOFF'S TELEVISION PREDICTION BELITTLED

RCA Chief's Statement of Early Invasion is Challenged by Coast Radio Engineer

Television and the home projector-radio this week made their debut as an integral part of radio, when radio interests sponsored the first widespread public presentation of these two developments at the annual national "Electrical-Radio Show," held in New York at Madison Square Garden.

David Sarnoff, president of Radio Corporation of America, in opening the six-day event, on Monday, attributed "the synchronization of sight and sound on the screen" to the results of radio research and development. "This development," Sarnoff said, "is now ready for its entrance into the home and I feel that next year, the theatre of the home will be established and on the way to become an outstanding institution.

"Nor is the day distant," he said, in discussing television, "when sight will be transmitted through the air to large numbers. We are on the threshold of television, and just as the shackles of silence were struck from the screen, so will the veil be lifted from our daily broadcast."

Sarnoff's prediction of an early invasion of television, however, was immediately challenged on the West Coast, where Harrison Holliway, engineer with KFRC radio station at San Francisco, stated that "the numerous radio laws will first have to be greatly simplified and untangled before television can be introduced."

"There are now many commercial methods of television," Holliway said, "but the multitude of radio broadcasting laws, fixing wave lengths and regulating of broadcasting make the introduction of television highly improbable from a widespread practical standpoint for many years."

Daily at the "World's Radio-Electrical Fair," there were 10-foot television pictures shown to the public for the first time. Five broadcasts each day were made from a television station erected on the exposition floor, with film, stage and vaudeville stars participating. Six manufacturers of television sets exhibited new devices for home use in pickups.

Numerous new devices were shown in which radio and 16 mm projector are combined.

Jackie Cooper Must Live On $1,600 Per Month

Jackie Cooper, M-G-M's nine-year-old star, will have to get along on $1,600 per month, in accordance with a decision handed down by Judge Charles Crail in Los Angeles. The decision was in answer to a petition from Mrs. Mabel Leonard Cooper, Jackie's mother, for an allowance for the boy's support from his salary of $1,300 per week.

Raid Dominion Film Offices for Combine Evidence

Prosecution of the 20 film companies mentioned in the report on the alleged Canadian trade combine is now being launched by Ontario, according to Attorney General Price. There is prospect of immediate individual action being taken by several other Dominion provinces, it is said.

Provincial officers, armed with search warrants, this week raided the offices of individuals and firms named in the report issued some time ago by Commissioner Peter White, which charged a combine existed in the Canadian industry. In the raids, several truckloads of private books, papers and office records were seized. They will be used as evidence in whatever criminal proceedings are developed.

Among the offices reported to have been visited by the raiders are those of Famous Players Canadian Corp, and the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors Association of Canada, and various film exchanges handling American product. No arrests of individuals have been ordered pending the findings of the grand jury, which will begin investigation of the firms mentioned in the Peter White report at the court of criminal assizes, opening October 5.

Alberta and Saskatchewan are reported to be supporting Ontario in the proposed prosecutions, and indictments are said to be in preparation in the two provinces.

New Television Plan In England "Revolutionary"

A new English television system, termed entirely revolutionary and involving sweeping changes both in the method of viewing the picture and transmitting it, has been revealed in London.

Under the system, a feature film would be "recorded" in a series of bands almost identical in appearance with a line spectrum and 5,000 feet of film could be recorded on a length of film not longer than 50 feet. Reproduction, in home use, would be at the rate of 20 pictures per second, providing a flickerless picture.

G. W. Walton, inventor, claims to use a system which experts suggest might completely overcome broadcast difficulties. The system is known as the Scophony system, and is the result of some nine years' effort. The system is said to fit in perfectly with motion picture photography.

EFFECTS OF WAIVING GOLD STANDARD

Decrease of 1¼ Per Cent In Net Income of American Film Companies Is Predicted Result

By THE ANALYST

The suspension of the gold standard by Great Britain will decrease the net income of American motion picture companies by about one and one-quarter per cent. Actual income from the countries which are on the sterling basis does not exceed five per cent of the aggregate net earnings of distributing companies and at the present time it appears that the sterling pound will be stabilized at a figure not less than 75 per cent of its par on the gold standard. Hence the decrease of 25 per cent in the net income from Great Britain.

This is the direct result which may be computed with a certainty at the present time. The earnings of motion picture companies are in sterling and when exchanged into dollars the aggregate must show a decrease proportionate to the decline in exchange rates. It is more than possible, however, that the suspension of the gold standard by Great Britain may be followed by effects which will change the present method of operations of the motion picture industry.

Taking the exchange rate which has prevailed since the gold standard was suspended the American motion picture company with dollars to spend can purchase approximately $1.14 worth of anything in England for $1. In other words things of value to the motion picture industry are still selling in England on the sterling basis in comparison with which the dollar is worth considerably more than just 100 cents. With sterling on the gold standard the dollar could purchase a pence or so more than four shillings worth of labor or material and now it can purchase nearly five shillings worth.

This may induce American motion picture companies to expand their production activities in England. That country always had things to offer of value to productions but the advantage of them has not been as enhanced as it is at the present time. Under the present value of the pound these things can be purchased in England at a price which would make them profitable to American companies in the world market.

A secondary effect which may follow the revaluation of the pound is probable because of the conditions which caused the abandonment of the gold standard by Great Britain. This is the necessity on the part of England to increase her income from nations outside the British Empire. A tariff on imports is being seriously agitated in England and if the Government decides to rid itself of the free trade policy motion pictures will be among the first articles of commerce that will be considered.

An import duty will be a serious affair for the American motion picture companies. With the taxes which English theatres already have to pay, the income from rentals is not any too attractive to compensate for the expense of doing business in England, Wales and Scotland. An import duty of any consequence, and with the evident temper of the British government towards American products in general, won't, if imposed, be a light one. It may prove impossible to send American made motion picture productions into England at a profit.

Such a situation would be a great inducement to go into production in England on a large scale. France has been able, through adroit legislation, to induce most companies to go into production there, and England, once the free trade policy is abandoned, will not be slow to follow suit. A heavy import tax combined with the cheapness of sterling when looked at from the dollar standpoint may well result in production activities in England on the part of American companies which can well, through logical development, rival the output of Hollywood.

Hollywood has had the advantage in the matter of climate. Since talkies came in, however, outdoor sets, or locations, have lost much of their popularity. In studio equipment and convenience England is on a par with anything America can offer. Added to this is acting material that the United States cannot offer, and the nearness of "the tight little isle" to the natives of all foreign countries offers an added lingual advantage in producing in England for the international trade.

Many times England has tried to tempt motion picture producers to engage in operations in that country. Many Americans have tried the same thing without any great success. Now, due to causes entirely separated from the motion picture industry, Great Britain may have accomplished the thing to which she has always aspired, that of becoming one of the leading motion picture producing countries.

Sees Good Radio Markets Abroad

Arthur Rocke, who handles radio and radio equipment sales abroad for various American manufacturers, has just returned from an eight months' tour of South America and Europe. He reports political conditions in Latin America in a state of flux, but dealers are being forced to buy from America by reason of empty shelves. He found dealers in all countries favorable to American product.

In some European countries, Rocke found, American sets were so widely in favor that prohibitive import duties have been placed on American products, to permit native manufacturers to compete. In others, customs authorities have placed a higher value on American radio equipment, with consequent higher import duty on the value.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE air is full of football. With the faintly perceptible yellowing of September's leaves, with tangled bittersweet and the flaunting orange of mountain ash adding pennant coloring to the woods, every city back lot is some small boy's stadium, every gridiron the setting for the freshman's dream of college triumphs.

At this refreshing moment of seasonal change even those of us who have passed our campus days are still fundamentally interested in intercollegiate sports. We welcome the motion picture program that brings them to us with all of the spirit, fast action and authenticity of the original games.

The producing companies in anticipation of the increasing demand for sports pictures have the following to offer on their fall schedules:

FOOTBALL

THE SPIRIT OF NOTRE DAME—A Universal picture about which the company went into consultation with Knute Rockne, and which had to be somewhat altered because of Rockne's untimely death. In it appear the famous "Four Horsemen"—Stuhldreher, Miller, Crowley and Leyden—in their original positions.

FOOTBALL FOR THE FAN—An Educational picture. It comprises a series of three short subjects:

1. Spring Training—The coaches of famous colleges put their squads through gridiron work. Howard F. Jones, coach of the University of California Trojans, shows his men in practice.
2. Wedge Plays—Howard Jones taking his Trojans through the many formations in wedge play. He shows the old method and the modern version. He has taken shots from some of the big games to show how the play is made effective.
3. Kicking Game—Features Harry Kepke, Wallace, Bill Ingram and Lou Little with their teams, bringing out the contrasting work of the various teams.

FOOTBALL—RKO Pathe offers a series of six unique football studies featuring the master plays of Rockne.

THE FORWARD PASS—An Educational short feature demonstrating one angle of the game as it is analyzed in their Football for the Fan series.

THE KICK-OFF—Hal Roach Studios offer the latest in their series of Boy Friends comedies, in which a group of college youngsters show some lively gridiron animation with two Loyola College teams.

TOUCHDOWN—Paramount. "Touchdown has been made from the book "Stadium" by Francis Wallace and tells a dramatic story of commercialism in football.

GOLF

GOLF WITH JOHNNY FARRELL—RKO Pathe. An outstanding series of exhibition golf shots dramatized with story background and includes Fore, Duffer Swings, Winning Putts, In the Rough, Under Par, and Getting on the Green.

HOW I PLAY GOLF—A Warner picture, done in a series of short subjects, with Bobby Jones demonstrating the proper positions and the use of the many clubs. The titles are Getting on the Green, Chip Shots, The Mashie-Niblick, Medium Irons, The Niblick, The Putter, Trouble Shots, Practice Shots, The Brassie, The Driver, The Spoon.

RACQUET SPORTS

TENNIS TOPNOTCHERS—RKO Pathe. Vincent Richards demonstrates the proper grip on the racquet, and explains strokes and position.

RACQUETEERS—RKO Pathe. Grantland Rice sketches the three big racquet games: tennis, lacrosse and jai a lai (hi-li).

AQUATIC SPORTS

OUTBOARD STUNTING—RKO Pathe. Grantland Rice Sportlight demonstrating the various water sports.

SWIM OR SINK—RKO Pathe. Grantland Rice Sportlight featuring Johnny Weismuller as a swimming instructor.

SPLASH—MGM. Swimming perfection shown by the amateur champions.

FISHING

Pat Dowling Denies Educational Plans Sponsored Reel Invasion

"Educational is not in the field of sponsored or advertising reels," according to Pat Dowling, president of Metropolitan Industrial Pictures, who denies a previously published story stating that Educational is interested with Metropolitan in sponsored reels.

"The producer of the film is Educational Talking Pictures, Ltd.," Dowling continued. "Metropolitan is handling production for Educational Talking Pictures."

Decision Soon on Craft-Cinema Suit

Next decision on the calendar of the Federal Court at Wilmington is in the suit of Consolidated Film Industries and its affiliate, Cinema Patents, against Nat Saland's Craft Film Laboratory, in which Consolidated charges infringement of Laboratory equipment and seeks royalty payments.

Craft, according to Saland, is fully protected inasmuch as the Canadian Pacific Railway, from which it purchased the machines, guaranteed a clear title. If Cinema and Consolidated win the suit, Canadian Pacific must pay the royalty bill, which amounts to $100,000, plus regular payments in future.

National Screen Brochure Points Value Of Trailer

National Screen Service Corporation, New York, has prepared an elaborate brochure, going forward to exhibitors, in which are outlined various methods of attracting new patronage and maintaining old, through the intelligent use of the screen as an advertising medium for the house by trailers. The brochure is titled "Building Patronage."

It is pointed out therein that the trailer is the most direct method by which the theatre manager can reach his potential patrons, and incorporated in the booklet are numerous suggestions for the use of trailers on special occasions, such as holidays and particular local events in which participation or assistance on the part of the theatre manager, may well react to his advantage in building good-will patronage.

A quote is reprinted from the Publix manual on trailers: "Every theatre patron is a potential patron for the following week, and good, concise, effective selling of your next week's show, through your screen trailers, will insure the return of the vast majority of your patrons. Trailers represent the best type of opportune merchandising. They stimulate box-office sales."

The National Screen brochure further offers suggestions for various types of contests, in which the local patrons may take part, with prizes for winners. All these may be advertised, initially, and constantly impressed on the minds of the patrons through the intelligent use of the trailer, suggests the booklet.

Lights and shadows of a great city. Drama and romance of ambitious youth thrown against the skyline of New York —birthplace of Theodore Roosevelt, Al Smith and Jimmie Walker.

Overboard from a barge, friendless, penniless, forcing the city to take him in, wresting a living, a sweetheart, a father from its teeming millions.

Youth will flock to it for it shows youth fighting, winning. Their elders also, for in it is Thomas Meighan in his most human role—as a father any son would love with a son any girl would be fond of.

HIT AFTER HIT

FOX IS THE TALK OF THE INDUSTRY!

THE BRAT

With Sally O'Neil, Frank Albertson, Allan Dinehart, Virginia Cherrill, June Collyer. From Maude Fulton's stage success. Directed by John Ford.

Society tried to tame a Bowery wildcat but she tamed society. Sally O'Neil never so delightful as in this laugh-exploding comedy.

THE SPIDER

With Edmund Lowe, Lois Moran, El Brendel, John Arledge, George E. Stone, Jesse De Vorska. Based on play by Fulton Oursler and Lowell Brentano. Directed by William Cameron Menzies and Kenneth MacKenna.

A theatre where the crime takes place not on the stage but in the audience. Who does it? The great magician, the lovely young girl, the hypnotic subject or a patron? Most novel of mysteries.

WICKED

With Elissa Landi, Victor McLaglen, Una Merkel, Allan Dinehart. Directed by Allan Dwan.

The glamorous Landi in high tension drama. They took her good name. That meant humiliation. They took her baby from her. That meant heartbreak. Picture that sways the emotions.

PASSING IN REVIEW

This department does not attempt to predict the public's reactions to pictures. It does, instead, present detailed and accurate information on product, together with the frank and honest opinion of the reporter

WHEN showmen come together to talk pictures it is always with opinion, judgments, evaluations. Pictures are necessarily to them pieces of merchandise, merchandise that is to be bought and sold. It is for that reason that it is deemed a service for MOTION PICTURE HERALD to present here, adjacent to its reportorial presentation of new product, a weekly survey of current and coming pictures by a showman, written strictly from the point of view of the exhibitor as a merchandiser of entertainment to his community.

Mr. Charles E. Lewis of Round Table fame, an exhibitor member of the editorial staff of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, beginning with this issue, will discuss pictures in the light of his appraisals and his diagnoses of box office problems and possibilities. It is expected, too, that in this department of new product, there will be contributions of like character from many others of the great array of twelve thousand-and-more showmen readers of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The purpose of this page under the writing hand of Mr. Lewis is constructive comment. In the main when pictures come up for reviewers' attention they have already been bought. The exhibitor is not nearly so much concerned about what may be the faults of the product as what it contains that lends to successful exploitation and presentation to the public. The money in this industry is made by what is right about the product and realization of its value.

Broadly, in the minds of real showmen pictures fall into two major classifications: First, the "box office" production, and the "audience" picture. By "box office" is meant the automatic success type of picture which sells itself for any one of several background reasons, while "audience" picture means one on which the patron has not been sold in advance, but which will deliver entertainment satisfaction. We shall find Mr. Lewis using these terms often. He will talk as a showman, not caring a merry hoot in the Superheated Hereafter about whether professional critics call the picture good or bad, but caring very much about what it is worth at his box office and yours.

TERRY RAMSAYE.

"MERELY MARY ANN," according to the "better" reviewers in this magnificent, colossal and gigantic industry of ours, is a slow-moving and dull sort of story. They even go so far as to warn you that it is NOT a second "Daddy Long Legs." I'll tell you what I think. It's box office as sure as you're a foot high and will come pretty darned near equaling the receipts of "Daddy" when you play it. THAT'S what should interest you birds back of the firing line.

Being "box office" must not mislead you into believing that the audience will go home raving about it. They won't. But they will register no kicks. It's simple, pleasing entertainment of the sort that folk in these hectic days want and should get plenty of. Simple stories don't overtax already overtaxed minds. It represents real relaxation and that is why we know you won't have any kicks after you've played "Merely Mary Ann."

"THIS MODERN AGE," in communities where Joan Crawford is b. o., will not only bring the sheckels to the cash box, but will send the people home quite satisfied that they have seen a good picture. If it accomplishes nothing else, it will erase the sour taste left by "Singing Sinners," which was as appropriate a vehicle for Joan as a hearse would be for you . . . and we'll assume that you're far from dead.

This one will do business for those who like Joan, and will even do business where she's not so hot. It's satisfying entertainment of the audience variety and should bring her many new fans. But salesmanship will be necessary. Sell this one the right way and you'll do more than bring in the Crawford boosters; and it has a hundred and one good sales angles to work on.

"FIVE STAR FINAL" is without question "box office" in every sense of the word. It is one of those smash pictures which is the life blood of the theatre today. You know the kind we mean; those productions which stimulate the theatre-goer's appetite for movies and gets them into the habit of coming to your theatre. God bless such pictures!

Robinson can be safely played up for all you're worth, and then some. He's a bigger bet in this picture than in anything he's done before. The newspaper slant opens up many avenues for tieups in that direction.

Not only will we call this "box office," but it's "audience" as well. Why say any more about a picture like this? Play it for your longest run and make sure that your farthest removed patron knows you're playing.

"THE LAST FLIGHT" is far from a "box office" picture except where Dick Barthelmess' name is a winner. Yet, from my point of view, it represents one of the finest pieces of entertainment released in a long, long time.

It's one of those things which starts off silly enough to make you wonder whether you've spent your money foolishly, yet, as the footage unreels, builds up your interest more and more. . . . Being the kind of picture it is . . . many will question my judgment in stamping it as an "audience" picture . . . but wait until you've previewed it . . . you'll be agreeing it's a darn fine piece of work.

Merchandising will have to be applied sensibly here . . . especially if your cash customers are sick of "war" pictures. Be sure they know that this is NOT a war picture. We liked the "Nikki" slant in the advertising; rather difficult to play up because Barthelmess is the star . . . but even at his expense we would suggest giving Helen Chandler plenty of publicity and advertising breaks . . . if only for the purpose of getting "Nikki" across to your patrons. . . .

Don't be influenced by some of the reviews we've read on this picture . . . you need have no fear about it pleasing your audience; it will do that—and give them the feeling that they have viewed a worthwhile piece of entertainment.

"BAD GIRL" by this time has made you so darned anxious to play it that little can be said to influence you one way or the other . . . yet . . . to my mind . . . a word of caution is mighty essential. Here's a picture that is a "knock-out" in every sense of the word . . . it will smash box office records and send the folk home with a feeling of satisfaction they rarely can derive from a movie. . . . But steer clear of any kind of advertising which portrays the "Bad Girl" as being something of an undressed street walker. . . . We've seen quite a bit of such advertising and it is all wet . . . even the cutout of the 24-sheet should be avoided . . . as well as the poster itself . . . it's just spoiling a good picture.

Being the hit that it is, "Bad Girl" is naturally "box office," and being so fine a picture, it is more than "audience"; it's great. Playing up Dunn is good business because it will help you with anything else he comes along in . . . but Sally Eilers deserves her share of the glory . . . you . . . like I . . . will probably get the surprise of your life when you see this little girl do some honest-to-goodness acting of the finest kind.

Play it—advertise it sensibly—give it the longest run you can risk, and then include in your evening's prayer a hope for more b. o. smashes like "Bad Girl."

"PERSONAL MAID," many of the Nancy Carroll boosters will tell you, is not a good story or role for Nancy, but to those thousands of exhibitors who must cater to the masses and not to the classes, it's going to bring in the dough.

It's none too strong from the b. o. point of view, so that means work. By work we mean going out and plugging it for all it's worth, and it's really worth plugging. A nice (that's just the word) pleasing audience picture that will bring forth many ahh's and ohh's during the screening. And when audiences start ahhing and oohing, then you know it's an audience picture. . . . Does this all sound sort of like Greek? Not to the boys who have a knack of doping them out in advance . . . or trying to, at any rate. . . .

Since we've already told you that it's more "audience" than "box office," it's up to you to study the picture's best merchandising angles and sell it so that the customers can come and get an evening of "nice" entertainment. Did we make ourselves clear on that one?

"THE SPIDER," being a mystery picture, naturally offers many slants to exploit it. The deeper the mystery . . . the more fun selling it . . . and again . . . the title suggests many angles for marquee and lobby displays which should mean something to the boys who must use such gags to help put over a picture. . . .

But, to get back to the picture itself. Not bad . . . but not too good. We suspect it would have made a corking good picture in about half the footage used . . . but the picture is made . . . released . . . and you've got to get some money with it. Don't misunderstand all this chatter . . . it's NOT a bad picture . . . as mystery pictures go . . . this one rates a good mark . . . but it's not a "great" attraction.

Properly merchandised, and sufficient interest being built up by reason of it being a mystery picture, they will not find fault after they've seen it. So it's purely an exploitation problem and to smart showmen that should be no problem at all. It possesses sufficient "audience" qualities to make it safe to go out and sell. What more do you want?

"DAUGHTER OF THE DRAGON" brings back Dr. Fu, and if you've played the Doc before you'll not have to beg them to come and see the latest "dirty work" that he pulls. . . . Here again the mystery slant will be a big appeal and, besides, this picture has some grand acting plus interest-holding situations that should be a real mouthful for the most discriminating mystery fan . . . and altogether we found this one a mighty interesting picture holding our attention firmly to the screen from start to finish . . . that's more than you can say for a lot of other pictures where the dialogue has made it impossible to steal a few winks of sleep. . . .

Superb cast (there I go using fancy words) or should I say, "Good" cast? Well . . . have it your own way . . . who cares? . . . The ritzy houses (some managers like to call their houses just that) often turns up their noses at pictures like this . . . they want sophisticated (hooey) stuff. . . . And all the time their cash customers are starving for a good old-fashioned mystery yarn like this one. . . .

This kind of picture has always brought money wherever I've run theatres and I don't doubt but that it will do as much for you. So exploit this one well.

Spirit of Notre Dame

(Universal)

Rockne Memorial Film

If the spirit of football has been able to bring together the largest audiences ever assembled in the world, then "The Spirit of Notre Dame" should be able to intrigue every one interested in football. And this should be considerable of a crowd! If you don't think so, try to buy a few good seats in the Olympic Stadium for the major games this fall—depression, or no depression.

Junior Laemmle has had the courage, or Notre Dame has convinced him (and they're not so dumb on audience psychology back there, either), that juvenile romance and picture formulæ are not so important when you have national heroes like Frank Carideo, Don Miller, Jim Crowley, Elmer Layden, Harry Stuhldreher, Adam Walsh, Bucky O'Connor, Moon Mullins, Johnny O'Brien and their like in a cast. So Junior and his cohorts set out really to show the American public what was behind this man Knute Rockne, why he was able to accomplish what he did at the University of Notre Dame, and to outline a few of the reasons why football is today the most popular and best-supported sport in America.

"Rock" is properly the theme of the piece. His magnetic instructions to his victorious teams start the whole thing rolling. You could sell Hoover government bonds at 105 with his brand of advice! The youth of America will be edified beyond words by it. And so will their dads and their brothers and—who knows—maybe their mothers and their sisters, too. Possibly, if "Rock" had lived long enough, we might have settled this matter of business slump by taking Knute's advice and just plunged right through it as though it were merely an ephemeral hurdle.

There is sound philosophy in this "Spirit of Notre Dame." It is the philosophy of keeping your eye on your goal and your mind on your work. It is the philosophy of fair play—and more, the cornerstone of success, team play. Never mind, says "Rock," about this all-American team, or who makes it. Play with and for your team; see that your team wins, even at the sacrifice of personal ambition.

I don't know whether "The Spirit of Notre Dame" will make money. If I did, Junior Laemmle probably would have me on his payroll. But I do know that there are millions of people in this country who will find inspiration in the devotional production which some of Rockne's warmest admirers and most adept pupils have given to Universal. Released during the football season, it has all the elements of timeliness necessary to popularity.

To the distinct credit of Lew Ayres, William Bakewell and Andy Devine, it may be said that they pose most successfully and most convincingly as Rockne stars, rather than movie stars. And that isn't so easy, as the sports editors might tell you! To that sterling Scandinavian, J. Farrell MacDonald, has been given the job of playing the role of the master, Rockne. Be it said to Mac's everlasting credit that he did Rockne as well as it could be done by any one but "Rock" himself. If I owned a football team I'd hire Mac to coach it! Harry Barris, too, helps excellently in providing natural comedy relief.

"The Spirit of Notre Dame" is another one of those Carl Laemmle productions which come along now and then, like "Western Front" or "Seed." It makes you glad you are connected with the picture business, because it is worthy of the screen's highest possible achievement, the lifting of millions out of the doldrums of life, inspiring them to the principles which have been the making of this great nation.

To Russell Mack, the director, and to Richard Schayer, who supervised and wrote the screenplay in collaboration with Dale Van Every, there should go special commendation.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Russell Mack. Adaptation by Richard Schayer and Dale Van Every. Photography by George Robinson. Film editor, Robert Carlisle. Art director, Danny Hall. Release date, October 13, 1931.

The Big Gamble

(RKO Pathe)

Melodrama

A gangland picture but with a different twist, due to the story and contrasts effected in direction, is this Charles R. Rogers production directed by Fred Niblo. Bill Boyd and Dorothy Sebastian have human roles throughout. The gang chief, played by Warner Oland, is of the suave type, and the mine-run variety of gangland conferences and shootings is missing. In fact, the gang phase, while always in the background, is not physically injected noticeably except at the beginning and toward the end of the picture. The climax, however, is straightforward melodrama, with a three-cornered chase which includes the oft-done race to the crossing ahead of a train. The audience at the Hippodrome in New York took well to it, with considerable applause.

The dialogue—the picture is from a story by Octavus Roy Cohen—abounds in humor, broad but not burlesque. And Warner Oland, with the experience of villainous roles in many productions, speaks his serious words with a quiet but telling effect, audience reaction showed.

The complication of plot that takes the picture out of the gangland groove is a marriage—a marriage forced by the gang's leader.

Alan Beckwith (Bill Boyd) determines to take his own life after a train of misfortune, but agrees to postpone the act for a year when Mr. North (Oland) says he'll clear up his debts for him if he'll marry Beverly (Miss Sebastian), in whose favor a $100,000 insurance policy against Alan's life is written. Beverly consents to the marriage in order to save the life of her brother Johnny (William Collier, Jr.), who has incurred North's displeasure.

The newlyweds learn to love each other. Alan goes into business with a vim and earns enough to offer North the amount borrowed, the sum North has spent on the year they have been married, and a bonus. But North insists on the $100,000. Johnny determines to kill North. Alan goes to save Johnny and North gets the drop on him. North instructs a lieutenant to take Johnny for his last ride. Squint (James Gleason), who as Alan's shadow provides the humorous touches with his wife, the housekeeper (Zasu Pitts), turns on North and covers him while Alan phones the police. Then Alan orders North to follow the gang car, as do the police. After a hazardous chase the gang car plunges off the road and Johnny is rescued. And Nora, the housekeeper, reveals that she and Squint are employees of the insurance company.

Running time, 63 minutes. Released September 4, 1931. A Charles R. Rogers production. Associate producer, Harry Joe Brown. Directed by Fred Niblo. Screen played by Walter De Leon and F. McCrew Wilkis. Story by Octavus Roy Cohen. Art director, Carroll Clark. Film editor, Joe Kane; cameraman, Hal Mohr; recorders, C. O'Louthlin and T. Carman; assistant director, E. J. Devotion

Drama

One comes away from "Devotion" with the feeling of having spent a very pleasant evening with a group of people who might have been even more interesting if they had been given the opportunity. Ann Harding does a superb characterization, not only "straight" but for a good share of the picture disguised as a cockney nursemaid. Leslie Howard, for the first time to our knowledge, has a screen part which allows him to demonstrate what a splendid actor he is. The production should greatly enhance his screen popularity with both producers and the public.

Without the skill of these two personalities, ably supported by sterling performances from Robert Williams, Alison Skipworth, Louise Closser Hale, Dudley Digges, O. P. Heggie and several other competent artists in comparatively minor roles, "Devotion" would be pretty weak fare. The trouble seems to lie with the story, sweet and charming, but scarcely strong enough or logical enough in treatment to make an outstanding picture. Robert Milton's direction is spotty, due probably to his difficulties with the story rather than his own personal ability. There are moments, even sequences, which stand out very prominently. There are other times when it seems as though his actors are standing around wondering what he wants them to do next.

However, Ann Harding is Ann Harding, and she lives up to her reputation in this one. She possesses a poise and sureness of delivery which never fails to entertain. When a man of Leslie Howard's fine genius for restraint and naturalism is beside her, the combination is bound to be pleasing.

From a novel by Pamela Wynne the photoplay has been done by Graham John and Horace Jackson. It tells the story of the little wallflower sister of an English family who becomes enamored of a successful young lawyer, but sees little opportunity of getting any great attention from him. Tired of being the family drudge, she seeks employment as nursemaid to the young lawyer's son. Then most of the action takes place in the lawyer's apartment, where Ann goes disguised in wig, spectacles and Victorian apparel. You know the rest, of course. Romance develops, the lawyer penetrates Ann's disguise and all ends happily.

The world premiere at Carthay Circle was staged with the usual colored lights and fanfare. The prominence of many among the audience attests to the high regard which the picture colony has for Miss Harding and her capable associates in the production.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed by Robert Milton. From Pamela Wynne's novel "A Little Flat in the Temple." Adaptation by Graham John and Horace Jackson. Cameraman, Hal Mohr. Film editor, Dan Mandell. Release date, September 25, 1931. Running time, 84 minutes.

Das Rheinlandmaedel

(Capitol)

Romance

True to the general construction of the German-made picture, "Das Rheinlandmaedel" abounds in music, largely vocal and running to quartets and male choruses. Also true to the German productions seen on or near Broadway, the music is of a melodious nature.

This production, made by Gustav Althoff Films, features Gretl Berndt and Werner Fütterer. Miss Berndt's beauty was not the least outstanding factor of the presentation at the Little Carnegie Playhouse in New York.

The theme is the familiar one of love finding a cross-cut through the obstables of wealth and poverty. At the same time the plot permits of logical injection of music at frequent intervals.

Hans Waldorf (Werner Fütterer), son of a wealthy industrialist, is inducted into the Saxo-Rhenia student fraternity with the ceremonies in the feudal clubhouse in the city of Cologne. Hidden by the garden wall is the housekeeping apartment of four girls, also students at the University of Bonn. The girls are Lore, Grete, Mizzi and Ilse.

Lore organizes the girls into an instrumental quartet to revive the exchequer which had drooped under the costs of the Carnival fling. The quartet is an immediate success at the music hall. Hans and Lore meet again near the end of the school term when the girls play at a fraternity dinner, but in the next room. When one of the men tries to make love to Lore, her screams bring Hans on the run. Later he wins her consent to join in a student excusion down the Rhine. This opens the way for a series of shots of the far-famed beauties of that valley.

Hans' father (George Pless) goes to Lore and asks her to give up the affair, writing an agreement on the back of a sheet of paper. She tells him that she does not intend to accept Hans' proposal of marriage. The father glances at the paper on his way down the stairs and finds that it is a brilliant exposition of a problem in chemistry. That night he tells his son that he must marry a girl who can be of help to him when he takes charge of the Waldorf Chemical Works. Then the notes of their favorite love song come from the next room and Hans rushes in to find Lore. The father has arranged the meeting.

Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, Sept. 17, 1931. Produced by Gustav Althoff Films. Distributed by Capitol Films. Directed by Johannes Meyer. Music by Willy Ostermann. Cameraman Charles Stumar. Authors W. Wassermann and Fritz Falkenstein.

Alice in Wonderland

(Unique Foto Film)

Juvenile Fantasy

This adaptation from "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," produced in feature length for almost exclusively juvenile audiences, is a distinct departure from accepted ideas of what constitutes film story material.

Unlike other productions aimed primarily at youthful audiences, there is nothing of juvenile reality, of actual, human experience in this picture. Action transpires in a world of dreams in which animals and playing card characters assume speech and live fantastical, imaginative adventures, all of which transpire in a world equally fantastical.

The production is without plot, or continuous central theme, which may be considered an advantage insofar as the very young audiences for which it is intended are concerned. There is no tax on the child mind requiring it to concentrate for long periods on a single theme unwinding at great length into a single story. The picture is merely a series of adventures experienced by Alice in her dream wonderland —separate and distinct stories, briefly enacted yet strung together in sequence so as to comprise one amazing, child adventure.

Costumes and sets naturally become of great importance in a production of this kind. In this, they do little more than serve their purpose. Sound is erratic in places, although lines are uniformly well enunciated, which should make them easy to catch by young audiences.

Ruth Gilbert, as Alice, makes an excellent child heroine in Wonderland. Supporting roles are well handled, and direction is good, it was agreed. The picture follows Lewis Carroll's book faithfully, and for this reason may be of considerable interest to adult admirers of the story and its author.

Produced and distributed by Unique Foto Film. Adapted from Sir Lewis Carroll's "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," by John E. Godson and Ashley Ayre Miller. Settings by Charles Nasca. Costumes by Tama. Theme song by Irving Berlin, with incidental music arranged by William David. Dialogue by Ashley Ayre Miller. Directed by Bud Pollard. Release date, Sept. 30, 1931. Running time, 55 minutes.

Pagan Lady

(Columbia)

Drama

Evelyn Brent here portrays the role of the "pagan lady" in this picturization of the William Du Bois stage play, with Charles Bickford as the he-man bootlegger who takes her by storm and finally marries her, and Conrad Nagel as the æsthetic appearing disciple of his reformer-uncle, played by William Farnum.

The film, which opened the B. S. Moss' Broadway, new playhouse of New York, held the capacity audience well, later comment indicating appreciation of the excellent work of the entire cast, and the fact that there was no weak spot in the list of players. Aside from the leads, praise was accorded the performance of Roland Young as the doctor who plays an important intermediary part in the complication which develops when Nagel appears on the scene during the absence of Bickford.

Bickford meets Miss Brent, a feminine bartender in a Havana cafe, and forcibly, despite opposition, takes her with him when he leaves for Miami. He does not offer marriage, but the "pagan lady" does not ask for that much.

Nagel and his reforming uncle visit the hotel where the two are staying, despite the efforts of Doctor Heath to prevent it, knowing the bootlegging propensities of the hotel's chief guest. Nagel falls in love with Miss Brent, and following their accidental marooning on an island overnight, and the discovery by the returned Bickford that they were in what appears to be a compromising situation, she announced that she will marry Nagel. She wants Bickford, but marriage a little more.

Bickford gives in, but the keen doctor diagnoses the case, and in a drunken moment tells Bickford the truth. Meanwhile, Miss Brent realizes the impossibility of her marriage and sends Nagel back to the uncle. Bickford, of course, arrives at the right moment and offers to marry the girl.

The story, fortunately enough, avoids the redeemed girl pitfall in development, carrying through the theme to its definitely logical, and, according to audience reaction, satisfactory conclusion. The direction of John Francis Dillon was well received.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by John Francis Dillon. From the play by William Du Bois. Adaptation by Benjamin Glazer. Film editor, Vi Lawrence. Photography by Norman Brodin and Gus Peterson. Release date, September 8, 1931. Running time, 77 minutes.

Sob Sister

(Fox)

Drama

This film, somewhat similar to "Bad Girl" in snappy dialogue and rapid movement, found real favor with the audience at the Ritz theatre recently on the Coast.

James Dunn and Linda Watkins, two young and comparative newcomers to the Fox roster, take the leads, and with the balance of the cast, it was generally agreed, were very decidedly satisfactory. Dunn, in particular, was extremely well received by the audience, and Miss Watkins was termed as demonstrating potential strength as a screen player.

Miss Watkins plays the "sob sister" on a large metropolitan daily, and is constantly a thorn in the side of the opposition paper, and particularly, in the side of Dunn, who is continually being scooped by the "sob sister." Romance commences when Dunn moves into the same apartment house in which the girl lives. It does not affect their business until after Dunn proposes and the wedding date is set. At the right moment, Miss Watkins' paper scoops Dunn and he accuses her. The engagement is broken. The expected conclusion comes, however, when Miss Watkins, in attempting the rescue of a kidnaped child, is herself kidnaped, and Dunn rescues her in turn, when everything is straightened out.

Fifty Fathoms Deep

(Columbia)

Drama

More than vaguely reminiscent of Columbia's "Submarine," the leads are played here by hard-faced, rough man Jack Holt and Richard Cromwell, smooth faced youngster who did so well in "Tol'able David," as the diving buddies who work for a salvage company.

During one of Jack's trips away, Richard meets and marries Loretta Sayers, a girl who is out for all she can get. Cromwell leaves in the unit which is at work in a rough sea on the salvaging of a ship which had been accidentally wrecked far at sea, and proving a stubborn job of salvage. Jack returns to town.

Having been told of Cromwell's marriage, and having the address from the happy boy, Holt visits the home, to find the wife of his buddy a girl of loose morals and having no love for the boy. As he threatens her, Cromwell suddenly returns. Holt, seeing the boy's feeling for the girl, refuses to divulge what he knows, and leaves. The wife tells Cromwell that Holt had made advances, and the boy, raging, goes to find Holt, who refuses to fight the lad, but is forced to knock him out.

A call comes that the yacht of a wealthy man, wrecked in a stormy sea in the harbor, has carried with it the owner and guests. Holt goes down and there discovers the body of the owner, which he sends to the surface, and then that of the boy's wife. Holt is caught between beams and cannot get loose, and the boy goes after him. Of course, as expected, he sees the body, and realizing the situation, the friends are friends once more, in a manner entirely expected.

Comment indicated audience satisfaction with the performances of Cromwell and Holt, and particularly with the excellent underwater shots of the divers at work. Loretta Sayer's work was not greeted with particular enthusiasm. The film as a whole seemed to hold the audience well, but was conceded to be by no means unusual, either in story or execution.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Roy William Neill. Adaptation by Dorothy Howell. Dialogue by Roy Chanslor. Film editor, Gene Havelick. Cameraman, Joseph Walker. Release date, August 20, 1931. Running time, 70 minutes.

Deadlock

Butchers Film Service

Drama in Film Studio

Here is an independent British production which sets an example for the larger concerns. It discards the set formula of the adapted stage play and strikes out for a breath of originality. The result is a picture which, while by no means a super, is still far more entertaining than scores of recent films upon which big money has been expended for ready-made stage stories.

A murder mystery theme, it serves also to introduce a whole cast of well known artists, many of whom, though stars in the old silent days, have not been seen in films for years. The standard of histrionics attained in this picture, sets one wondering whether, after all, the actor of today has not a good deal to learn from those of yesterday. This picture, moreover, is a plea for the original screen story. Written by Billie Bristow and Chas. Bennett, it introduces Markham Savage, a philandering film star, whose mysterious murder, during the shooting of a studio scene, involves a young man who had just previously interviewed Savage on a delicate family matter. Suspicion is very real against the young fellow, who is defended in a strong court scene, by the father of a girl with whom he is in love. At the last moment when everything looks very black, "rushes" of the film taken on the fateful afternoon, reveal that the hand of a woman shot Savage, and the boy is cleared. Detection comes finally through some wandering shots taken by a swinging camera which at the moment the shot was fired, worked loose on a gantry. This is a distinctly original twist, which brings a complete turn in events, at a moment when the conviction of the innocent boy looks certain. It transpires that Savage was murdered by a jealous mistress.

Not only this originality of story, but the very fine acting of each member of the cast, contribute to the making of one of the best British talkers ever put out by an independent production unit. Stewart Rome, Marjorie Hume, Alma Taylor, Annette Benson, Cameron Carr, Pauline Peters, and Hay Plumb are all stars of bygone British films, and they come back with a bang.

George King, one of Britain's youngest directors, is responsible for this one, and makes the most authentic studio shots. In this case incidents in the film studio, which add greatly to the interest, are all logically part of the story, and are most ingeniously exploited. Though not put forward as a super film, this is one British picture which really deserves a little attention as an American cinema proposition.

Produced by Butchers Film Service (F. W. Baker). Directed by George King. Scenario by Billie Bristow and Chas. Bennett. Recorded by R.C.A. Running time, 85 minutes.

Screen Souvenirs

(Paramount)

Great

This is the first number of what originally was called "Movie Memories." It is most excellent short feature stuff, and at the New York Paramount, held the audience closely throughout and had them rocking in their seats with laughter on numerous occasions. Unusual and intensely interesting are the newsreel shots of an earlier day before the camera, heightened in effect with clever dialogue and musical accompaniment. The audience broke into applause when Christy Mathewson popped up before them and when Theodore Roosevelt was shown at the opening of the Panama Canal. "The Curse of an Aching Heart," early melodrama, gave the patrons their greatest enjoyment. A winner.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Jerusalem
The Holy City

Standard Film

Splendid

Likable and interesting for its sincere and realistic treatment is this production by Ideal Pictures. There are no embellishments, no romantic sunset or daybreak scenes. Instead, one feels that he has seen Jerusalem "as is," and that is not true of many travel pictures which sacrifice factual portrayal for idealism. The picture, prepared by Allyn B. Careck and with musical background, has excellent and picturesque dialogue. An adept bit of metaphor describes the domes of the city as "Eskimo penthouses."—Running time, 10 minutes.

My Wife's Gone to the Country

(Paramount)

Fair

A Max Fleischer screen song number, which received only a fair reception at the New York Paramount. There was a noticeable lack of effort on the part of the patrons in following the bouncing ball, but the concluding sequence drew a laugh. It would, since it shows the wife, in the country listening to her husband raving over the radio about her absence, reaches into the loudspeaker and hits him in the face.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Beach Pajamas

(RKO Pathe)

Fair

One of the Traveling Man comedy series, with Louis John Bartels in the title part as the traveling salesman who is in a tight scrape after trying to flirt with the fiancee of the owner of a large department store, whom he intended to sell. The girl friend of the fiancee cooks up the plan to save her cousin from an unwelcome marriage with the store owner. It succeeds, the salesman is the goat and there is plenty of slap-stick to prove it.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The World Flier

Novel

Once again, Sennettcolor takes an important part in a comedy effort from the Sennett studio. Yarn concerns a boasting foreign count, with a mixed accent of French and German, who is making a round-the-world flight in a small plane. Boasting of his prowess in the motor boat, he is given an opportunity. Before he is even seated, the boat starts, giving the count the ride of his life, which he ends with a life preserver about his neck. Unusual shots of the race from the air are extremely effective. Direction by Leslie Pearce.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Where Men Are Men

A Few Laughs

A few spots in this comedy brought a favorable response, but for the most part the brogue affected by Joe Penner was difficult to understand and the comedy was overfarced. It concerns a clerk who is fired for cutting up in the boss' office and then learns that he has inherited a house in the Wild West. He gets the Carters and Mayfields in separate rooms under his roof without fighting long enough to sell the place for $10,000, then makes a pony-dive for the railroad station. There he learns that the feud was renewed so successfully that all of both families were shot out of existence.—Running time, 16 minutes.

The Turn of the Tide

(RKO Pathe)

Excellent

Rapid-tongued Floyd Gibbons, who has a knack of recounting with a sure touch for the suspensive and a flair for the dramatic, tells the story of the turning point of the World War, in the second of the "Supreme Thrills," when the two American divisions successfully rebuffed the last great German advance and immediately followed with the greater counter-offensive which drove the Germans back over hard-won territory and started their retreat which ended in November. Gibbons is aided in the initial sequence by Major-General Harbord, commander of the offensive of July 18, 1918, then spins his own breathless story, while the camera, with the aid of animated map and battle scenes, gives to the eye what Gibbons gives to the ear. More than interesting, it graphically portrays a turning point in war, and as such cannot help but be gripping, particularly by reason of the manner of its rendition.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Kentucky Belles

(Universal)

Amusing

More than a little originality in idea and execution suffice to make this an enjoyably humorous animated cartoon number. A steeplechase in which our hero outwits his foe by various clever rearrangements of his horse, to win by an excessively long nose, which swells when the losing rider hits it too hard. A good laugh.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Amusing

Walter Catlett, Al St. John and Dorothy Granger provide a number of laughs in this, which concerns the young bridegroom, who is shunted out of the wedding pictures and then into the rumble seat on the motor ride after the wedding. His anger rises and rises until, when the third party proposes that they sleep in the open, the bridegroom tosses him off the cliff. He tells his wife he is the boss and the finish laugh comes when she effectively swings her right against his jaw.—Running time, 9 minutes.

AMERICANS NIP FILM MONOPOLY OF LEADING CIRCUITS IN BRITAIN

Hope for Relief From Music Tax Given by Senator

Senator Dill of Washington, prominent member of the U. S. Senate, this week gave exhibitors hope that the copyright law will be changed at the next Congressional session, and thereby give to theatres relief from the bitterly opposed music tax.

Dill, speaking before the Allied Amusements Association, meeting at Spokane, joined exhibitors in flaying the alleged unfairness of the music tax and the copyright law which permits of its collection.

The theatre owners unit scored encroachments by parent-teacher associations, the American Legion and fly-by-night portable picture operators on the rights of established exhibitors.

J. M. Hone, secretary-treasurer, stated that theatres paid a fair share of taxes to operate schools, and yet often parent-teacher associations cooperate with some itinerant showmen and put on a show in the school to make money for themselves. He stated the American Legion was the worst offender and that steps were being taken to make these organizations see the unfairness of their practices.

Fox Opens Another Newsreel in Europe

The German press accepted as a favorable novelty the recent opening at Berlin of another in the string of newsreel houses which Fox Movietone is building in Europe. Ben Miggins, European director of the reel, and Russell A. Muth, in charge in Germany, launched the theatre, which was described by the Berliner Lokal-Anzeiger, according to cables this week from Berlin, as "a novelty for which there exists great interest."

The innovation, it was stated by the Vossische Zeitung, "surely will find many friends and will be welcome to all who usually prefer the newsreel."

The critic from Tempo said: "For many people who do not wish to kill time in a movie but who want to actually live through the events of our time as lively as possible, the Newsreel theatre is most important."

The Acht-Uhr Abendblatt said: "The newsreel has found a theatre for itself in which it forms the program and acts as contact with the whole world."

Independents, 'Rooked' by Parliament, Get Aid

U. S. Companies Making British Pictures Raise Standard and Prevent Cornering of Product

By W. H. MOORING, London

Every British cinema owner is required by law to allot at least 10 per cent of his film time to British footage, starting October 1 and for the next year. And that 10 per cent, in effect, must balance out shorts and features of British origin against shorts and features imported.

Unless the American units now in the early stages of production schedules on this side are able to show this country how rapidly and efficiently Americans can move, there is going to be some fun for many of those British theatre owners. At present, and for some time past, with the Quota at 5 per cent and then 7½ per cent, difficulty has persisted in regard to an adequate choice of British quota films, both features and shorts, for the independent theatre owner.

Rubbish for Smaller Man

So far the effect of the quota law in regard to cinemas has been to force the smaller man to book all kinds of doubtful rubbish just to keep himself off the magisterial red carpet.

Meantime, the big circuits, having their own studio units, promptly snapped up all their own best pictures, for their own theatres, leaving the rest for the small theatre owner.

I have collected figures covering a terribly large number of small independent theatres, which show conclusively that many independent exhibitors have lost heavily as a result of the compulsory booking of British films. Had they been able to exercise their usual right of selection, doubtless such British films as they would have booked would have paid their way, maybe sometimes with a profit. But the shameful truth is that among those theatre owners who could least afford to lose money, very considerable losses have been suffered because they had not been able to get the right kind of British stuff, in sufficiently large quantities, to satisfy at one and the same time the demands of the law and of the public.

Americans Smash Monopoly

In cold stark truth, they have been rooked by Act of Parliament, and they would doubtless have been rooked again and again had not the leading American concerns decided to come to this country and make British films. Not only has this latest development increased the number of British quota subjects: it has—even so early—raised the general standard of quality, as well as placed upon the market an output which is not the cornered sustenance of one or other of the two leading British circuits after the first successful run.

It just happens by a peculiar combination of circumstances that America, sometimes held to be the home of monopoly, has broken a particularly vicious system of monopolistic practice which not only was retarding the progress of the British exhibitor but also was doing the cause of the British film incalculable harm throughout the world.

SHORTS ON BROADWAY

Beginning in this issue, MOTION PICTURE HERALD offers to exhibitors as a regular weekly feature, a concisely arranged list of the short subjects current at the major Broadway picture houses in support of the feature attractions. In this way exhibitors may obtain an idea of the selections made by the Broadway theatres from among the wealth of short subjects regularly produced.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 29 key cities for the current week indicate that grosses are holding the gain recorded in this compilation in recent weeks. Total receipts for this week reached $2,318,525, as compared with $2,318,629 for the previous seven day period, the difference, $104, being too negligible to merit consideration. Three new low figures were recorded in the current listing, and one new high, exactly the same as during the preceding week. The new high was received from the Imperial theatre in Toronto, Canada, where "Merely Mary Ann" grossed $22,000. With the coming of the autumn season and the general release of the new product, there is every reason to expect a further increase in receipts in succeeding weeks.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

A MANAGER of some twenty-two years' experience took exception to our remarks of a few weeks ago, when we suggested that showmen today must come out in the open and tell what . . . and how . . . they are doing. . . . This "old-timer" tells us that he never contributed a single line to a trade paper or permitted himself publicity of any sort . . . he was "just the manager" . . . and expected to be that and nothing else until he was too old to work. . . .

Isn't that a pity? . . . Imagine a man with so many years' experience and background . . . the fine things he accomplished in the course of those twenty-two years. . . . And the industry never even knew he existed. . . . But, after all, his own remarks answer his questioning of our suggestion. . . . He tells us that he expects to remain "just the manager" until he dies . . . that's his outlook after twenty-two years . . . and a pity it is, too. . . . Maybe if he had used the trade press to let the industry know what type of showman he was, he might today be holding down an important job with one of the circuits or operating a small group for some independent. . . . Both are always on the lookout for good manpower, but they can't possibly find them through any better medium than the trade papers. . . . He says we are wrong . . . we KNOW that HE is. . . .

You would never attempt to drive your car any great distance if it were in a broken-down condition and sadly in need of repair . . . yet . . . you think you are really smart and saving money when you constantly put off making repairs or replacements in your theatre's equipment. . . . "Penny-wise and pound-foolish" is what some folks call it . . . downright carelessness is what we call it. . . . A smart showman must be a clever business man . . . and no clever business man ever attempted to operate his business with dilapidated equipment. . . . Make those much-needed repairs now . . . be sure, especially, that your booth and projection equipment are in top-notch condition at all times . . . and at the first sign of wear or tear . . . get busy and fix it. . . .

Somewhere or other we came across the following: "A man is paid, not for having brains, but for using them." . . . There's a neat little line to remember . . . especially those super-smart showmen who can always tell the other fellow how to do things, but can really do them himself. . . . If you've got brains . . . use them. . . . If you're not sure that you have any . . . just keep quiet and don't let the whole world in on your secret. . . .

Harold B. Franklin believes in a five-day week. . . . May we ask, dear H. C., whether your theatre managers are to be included in the new plan??? . . . Not that we would question the merits of this five-day plan. . . . Nay . . . on the contrary . . . we're in favor of it and will even mention it to Mr. Martin Quigley the next time we meet him. . . . After a record-breaking summer of New York's heat . . . we would like to get up enough courage to suggest a three-day week. . . . But—come to think of it . . . why work at all . . . ???

The men managing theatres must recognize the fact that they are responsible for each and every detail in the operation of their houses. . . . Passing the buck will get you nowhere. . . . On the contrary . . . it brands you as a man without guts or lacking in real ability. . . .

If your house is dirty . . . if your cashier is careless . . . if your doorman is discourteous . . . if your projection is sloppy. . . . YOU are to blame . . . not the porter . . . the cashier . . . the doorman or the projectionist. . . .

As the "manager" it is assumed that you are managing . . . and if you are managing you must be watching every one of those details to be certain that each and every one of your staff is functioning properly and to your entire satisfaction. . . . Where you can't get such a return from an employee you are in need of some staff changes. . . .

Now, more than at any other time, the poor kiddies are sadly in need of old clothes and shoes. . . . Many of them are ashamed to attend school because of the lack of decent clothing.

Why wait for Christmas to play Santa Claus? . . . Why not promote an "old clothes" special matinee. . . . The price of admission to be any article of wearing apparel or old shoes? . . . Get your newspaper and welfare organizations behind this campaign and then see that the stuff is properly distributed to the worthy kiddies. . . .

Incidentally . . . you might keep this same thought in mind when you feel it is time to promote some coal or food for the poor folks who have been harder hit by present conditions than you. . . . Make every week a Christmas affair. . . . God knows it's necessary in many spots. . . . So . . . wake up, boys. . . . Don't be a "once-a-year" Santa Claus. . . . !

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

Editor's Note: In introducing Guy Jones and his "Keeping Up With the Times" series, we are again fortunate in being able to line up a cartoonist who is a fine showman and a fine showman who is a corking good cartoonist. Which means, he will be well able to picture his ideas from the practical as well as humorous point of view. We feel certain that with Dick Kirschbaum and Guy Jones contributing to the Club pages we will not want for good cartoons.

BOTH DOING "TURN-AWAY" BUSINESS

Bell's Campaign On 'Huck Finn' Was An Effective Sales Aid

What Floyd Bell and associates are doing over in the big Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, Mass., always makes interesting reading so we'll jot down a few highlights of a recent campaign made on "Huckleberry Finn."

For one thing Bell made a tie-up on Twain's books and distributed 15,000 book markers in the Public Library and all branches and all other leading libraries in the city. The bottom of the marker carried boxed copy on theatre, picture and playdates.

Another publicity stunt consisted of the preparation of a health chart in conjunction with a local gymnasium and a local newspaper. Circulation of the chart was gained through the tie-up with the newspaper and each morning, during the broadcast of health exercises by the gymnasium, announcement was made of current attractions at the "Met." Publix stage girls were used for subjects to describe exercises for photographic reproduction on the chart.

It was also arranged with a local ice cream company for issue of an attractive window sticker printed on coated stock. This pictured a family group posed in front of plates of cream and copy read, "Come In for some 'Blank' Ice Cream, Then Go To the Met to See and Hear 'Huckleberry Fin' "—cast followed.

Last but not least was a tie-up made with another newspaper in which 350 of its news boys paraded down the street carrying huge banners reading, "On Our Way to the Met to See Huck Finn." Columns of photos and reading matter resulted from this stunt.

Excellent results attended Bell's efforts on the above picture through the use of the circularizing methods described above and we are passing the information along to the rest of the Club. In the meantime we shall attempt to gather some more dope on what this well known Round Tabler is doing to sell the "Met."

Nance Has Poster Route Plan Which Will Reduce Cost

As a means of reducing the cost of all lithos and paper smaller than 3-sheets, F. D. Nance, general manager of Hall Industries Theatres, Beeville, Texas, has worked out a plan which we are sure will interest all Club members connected with the management of a number of independent theatres, or independent theatre operators as a group.

We have before us one of his monthly poster route sheets which explains the scheme at a glance. Films are listed under distributor names, showing dates each picture is to play one of the Hall Theatres and each town ships along to the next town on the route all one-sheets, 11 x 14 inserts, window cards and other advertising. All paper is out under glass and care is taking in folding so that it will reach the next town in the best possible condition.

The above plan makes it practical to use one set of paper for nine engagements, each town being charged with one-ninth the cost of new paper. Members will readily see that a lot of money may be saved where a large number of pictures are used in the course of a year as applied to one chain; or, a number of independents can line up and book on this basis and cash in by the same method. This is certainly worth serious consideration and the Club is indebted to Nance for passing along the idea. Of course, the question is one of availability. He's the head of a live outfit down in Texas and we sincerely hope to hear more from him during the new season and thereafter.

Lobby Switchboard Used By Frederick For "Secret Call"

A tie-up with the telephone company in connection with a telephone lobby stunt was used to exploit "Secret Call" by C. Frederick, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Pittsfield, Mass.

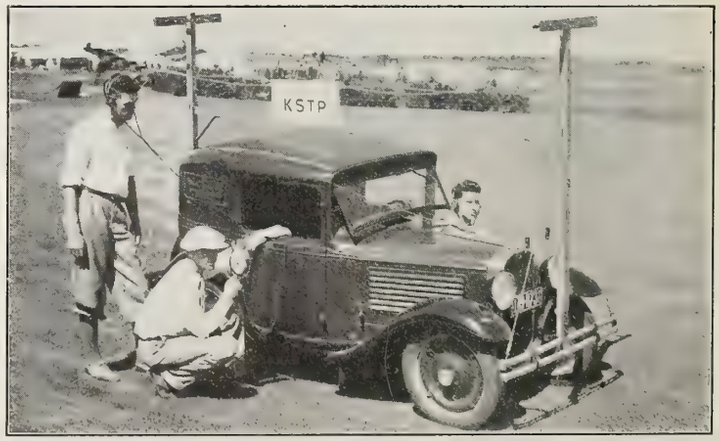
Frederick had a girl in the lobby making a number of telephone calls from a selected list, "This is not a secret call but the new Richard Arlen will appear in The Secret Call at the Capitol, etc."

The stunt was put over through the co-operation of the telephone company, they furnishing a large switchboard in lobby three days in advance and during showing of picture. The board was operated by a telephone operator, receiving all calls and talking on "Secret Call" in a loud voice so all in lobby could hear—giving playdates, cast, etc.

Attached to the switchboard was a dial that is to be used in the new dial system which the company inaugurates in October. This was demonstrated by the girl to many of the patrons; the idea being to familiarize the people with the new dial system.

We've published quite a number of telephone stunts on this picture but this one appears to have a slightly different twist than the rest, particularly the act of taking advantage of installation of the new dial 'phones. What have you done to start off the new season, Frederick?

BROADCASTING CURRENT EVENTS!

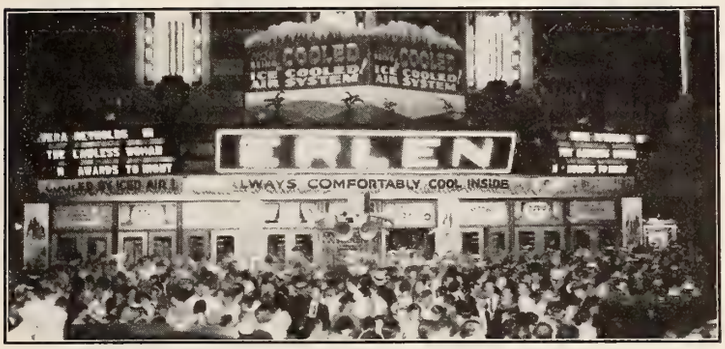


Dick Gilbert, divisional exploitation man with RKO, combined forces with Radio Station KSTP to broadcast the play-by-play account of two major golf tournaments to loud speakers attached to the front of the RKO Orpheum Theatres in St. Paul and Minneapolis. The little Austin car shown above was made over into a short wave transmitter to follow the players along the fairways without injuring the turf.

David R. Sablosky Ran An Elaborate Give-Away At Erlen

Until this publication's circulation department was consulted there was an element of mystery surrounding receipt of a photograph and tab newspaper from Erlen, Pa., showing a huge crowd in front of the Erlen Theatre and detailing an account of an elaborate give-away campaign.

True, our suspicions were aroused when we read a front page story signed D.R.S., thanking North Philadelphia citizens for patronizing the event of the week in such a whole hearted way and when we turned to the editorial page and noted that David R. Sablosky was editor, we began to wonder if this newspaperman were showman, too. Now the cat's out of the bag; for as far as our records show, he's one and the same fellow and if we're wrong let him correct this statement. As far as we know he's one of the famous Sablosky brothers, known all over Philadelphia.



You can see for yourselves that a tremendous crowd gathered in front of the theatre on the night this photograph was taken and when we glance over the long list of items given away we can well understand this evidence of enthusiasm. Note the loud speaker horns in center and the general attractiveness of the whole theatre front. Dave, that's a great gag—having a swell theatre and owning a newspaper to boot. Many Round Tablers will envy you. How about letting us all in on how you financed such an elaborate give-away week. And what are your plans for that coming "County Fair and Food Show"?

Lawrence On Toes With New Job With Schine's In Ohio

Sid Lawrence has been a mighty busy man since becoming division manager for Schine out in Ohio territory, but even so, finds time to send Club headquarters a few words in order to let us all know what he and his associates are doing to pep up business at the Piqua Theatre, Piqua, and other towns in his division.

For one stunt, he managed to get a two-column box in his newspaper to effect that Schine's Piqua Theatre would be kept open all night for the benefit of citizens who wished to sleep in a cool place. This one was pulled during the recent hot spell, when the whole country was sizzling with the extremely torrid weather. Sleeping time was scheduled to begin at 11 P. M. and patrons were advised to bring along a cot. It was stated that a watchman would be on hand.

Whether or not the 'phone number of the Piqua was intentionally left out of the new telephone directory as a gag or as just an error, it furnished him with an opportunity to send out a brief message to the public advising that the mistake had been made and giving the right number.

Other activities include a tie-up with a gas and oil distributor on the occasion of "The Millionaire," for distribution of a card reading "Drive Slow and See Our Town—Drive Fast and See Our Jail," both theatre and gas company getting an even break on copy; and a little circular handed out by the usher staff that advertised a couple of radio personalities on one side and bore institutional copy signed by "Your Usher" on the other.

That sleeping stunt of Lawrence's certainly was good for a good break from the newspaper but he doesn't tell whether the citizens took advantage of his offer. That kind of a gag might be alright over in Piqua, Sid, but if we were a New York City manager we'd be scared to extend a similar invitation to the public over here, unless a platoon of Mulrooney's boys were on hand to see that they didn't take away the seats. We'll be expecting to hear more from this Round Tabler just as soon as he gets completely organized with the new job.

Exposition Helped Roy Smart Exploit Number of Pictures

Roy L. Smart of the Paramount Theatre, High Point, N. C., tied in with dealers at a furniture exposition that helped to sell such pictures as "Politics," "Man in Possession," "Magnificent Lie," "Night Nurse" and "Smiling Lieutenant."

By arrangement with the furniture dealers' association, they gave each buyer registering at the show, a ticket to the Paramount Theatre. The association paid for these tickets, being granted a small discount. 281 of the tickets were used.

The theatre was practically given an entire page in the furniture magazine, "Furniture South" and an editorial in their July issue.

A display was arranged in the furniture exposition building in a prominent place; displays being on each picture. 5,000 copies of a special edition of "Theatre News" playing up these five pictures were passed out in the exposition building and also placed in rooms of the two leading hotels.

Smart used the furniture angle to sell the shows to the local patrons; the idea being that the theatre was bringing the industries best attractions to the nation's furniture dealers.

FREE ADVERTISING THAT ATTRACTS!

Instead of the customary mention generally used in tie-ups of this sort, the manager of the Fox Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., secured this two column by nine inch ad right at the top center of the classified section of the Sunday edition. A total of two hundred and fifty-two lines of free space; figured at space rates, means a worthwhile tie-up in every sense of the word.

Another important slant is the preponderance of space for the theatre and attraction and not for the newspaper. Common sense reasoning probably manifested itself in the form of making sure that the prospective ad seeker would be attracted to the announcement by reason of the theatrical appearance of the ad, then would read through and find out what it was all about.

The next time YOU make a deal for something like this with your newspaper, see that YOUR house gets as good a break in the make-up of the copy as the Fox-Atlanta did. Otherwise your tie-up will not mean enough to warrant the trouble.

E. M. McDaniel Busy With Two Theatres In Kingsville, Tex.

With the opening of a second house, the Rex, E. M. McDaniel, manager of the Kingsville, Texas, division of Hall Industries Theatres, was a very busy showman during the month of August but we've gotten a line on some of his recent activities and will try to give his fellow Club members an insight on what he's been doing.

For one thing, prior to opening the new Rex, he got out a crackerjack six page folder "Extra" as one means of announcing the event to the public. In addition to carrying institutional copy it was liberally supported by a large number of local and other advertisers. Photos of H. W. Hall, J. S. Hall, Jr. and F. D. Nance, all Hall executives, appeared on the front page.

We are reproducing a snapshot taken of one of a number of flash banners made up to plug midnight shows. It takes considerable selling to keep them up late at night in the smaller communities and this method has been used with pronounced success. An other means used to advertise these performances is the telephone system. On the day prior to opening, a girl calls every number listed in the directory. Naturally, this takes up quite a lot of time but results from this scheme have also been entirely worth the effort.

Here is a reprint of some institutional copy used to sell a Spring Jubilee at the Rialto. Lest some may think that this sort of stuff is unseasonable right now, we'll take the responsibility of stating that it can effectively be used in connection with any special event at any time of the year.

A THOUGHT!

Rialto, the principal bridge of Venice, and the only one spanning the grand canal. Shakespeare mentions the bridge as a rendezvous in his works, and the term has become synonymous with the meeting places of the throngs in most populous places. Hence, RIALTO.

The Rialto Theatre is your meeting place. In it you find rest and relaxion from the days of worry and work. In it we have tried to make you feel at home. In keeping with the policies of Hall Industries we are striving to make the RIALTO the ranking Theatre of the South. Only the best in Talking Pictures are offered and every thought of our employees are for your particular comfort and enjoyment.

In offering our RIALTO SPRING JUBILEE we hope that you will catch the full meaning of the term. A Perfect week's entertainment has been selected from the cream of the 1930-31 Talking Picture hits. During this week you can be assured of a Picture to your liking. No expense has been spared in selecting these Pictures and the various accompanying Shorts that go to make up the programs. In fact it is our Sincerest wish that you see each of these Pictures.

Again we wish to assure you that we are at your service. Every possible effort will be made to see that you are comfortably and favorably seated at any of these performances. We suggest that if it is possible that you attend the Matinees to avoid the possibility of missing out on crowded night Shows.

And we also wish to remind you. We are here not only on these dates, but 365 days out of each year. And as always, from the owners as well as the management and the entire personnel we hope that you find the same DeLuxe entertainment and relaxation that we hope that you have in the past.

E. M. McDANIEL, Manager
RIALTO THEATRE, KINGSVILLE

McDaniel also thoroughly believes in the promotion of co-op ads as a very effective and cheap form of advertising, providing it's not overdone. Used with discretion, ads of this nature not only get across the theatre's message to the public but create interest in the theatre among business men.

It is to be hoped that Mack will not be too busily engaged with the operation of two theatres so that he won't be able to find time to let his fellow Club members know what's going on in his town. It's been some little time since we've heard from him and we're glad to see his name in print again.

Suggs Made Clock Deal With Jeweler That Boosted B. O.

A clock stunt was recently pulled by M. S. Suggs, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., which resulted in some valuable advertising on "Lawyer's Secret." The tie-up was made with a local jeweler.

The jeweler gave over his entire window to a display of clocks. An eight-day clock, partly wound, was placed in the center of the window—a card nearby carrying copy offering prizes to the ones correctly estimating the time the clock would stop. This clock was put in the window seven days in advance of picture.

One hundred and fifty persons registered their guesses in the store and countless others were also interested indirectly as to the outcome of the winners. The first prize winner received a beautiful ladies ring, a gift of the store. And the theatre kicked in with guest tickets to the next six winners.

The window display and stunt was one of the brightest topics of the town for a whole week, all of which made good advertising for the picture.

Suggs also got out a special letter setting forth details about the picture. These were mailed to every lawyer in the city.

The above was purely a local scheme and had no connection with some past stunts promoted by fellows who travel around the country getting theatre managers to go in for lavish give-aways resulting from a somewhat similar clock gag pulled in theatre lobbies. Beware of these; but, when you can promote one through a reliable party, such as Suggs did with his local jeweler, it will undoubtedly turn out as well for you as it did for him.

Forthcoming Feature

Next week's issue will feature a photographic reproduction of striking atmospheric fronts designed by Fred Cruise, manager of the Fox-Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif.

PLAY FAIR WITH THE NEWSPAPERS!

Much Can Be Accomplished By Smart Cooperation!

The man who wrote this story thought we should leave his name out for the present, so we're respecting his wishes. But the omission won't fool a great many of his friends because they will immediately recognize the style and his expert knowledge of the subject under discussion.

Here is a yarn dealing with a most important phase of every showman and press agent's existence. Those who have had to battle with their local papers have been through the grind and know what a task it is. On the other hand; those who are sadly in need of guidance in their contact and relationship with the newspaper's personnel will undoubtedly find the contents of this story tremendously valuable.

We are particularly gratified to present this article at the start of the new season. We sincerely hope you will all find it both interesting and helpful.

A SHORT time ago I visited a newspaper office with the press representative of a downtown theatre . . . no matter the town, the theatre or the press agent . . . the happening actually took place.

While chatting with the drama editor I spotted the press agent of an opposition theatre. He was seated at a typewriter, coat off and busy as any member of the staff. Turning to the drama editor, I said: "Jim Jones (and that isn't his name) acts as though he worked on the sheet." Then I heard a story . . . the drama editor's praise of this press agent . . . here it is:

A Good System

"He does work here, but he isn't on the pay roll. Stay here and chin with me for a while and you'll probably hear the desk yell for Jim to take a 'phone and give him a re-write on some story that is breaking.

"Jones never writes any stuff in his office at the theatre . . . claims it's too much time wasted. He comes in to me . . . asks me what I need; I tell him and he sits down and writes it. Then he goes to the city editor or the big chief . . . tells him of an idea that he has and if he gets away with it—he sits down and writes that story. The chances are he has left the photographs to illustrate his story with the girl outside, he gets them—explains his idea of the art to the layout man and he's on his way to the next newspaper to repeat his stuff.

"A couple months ago I came down with the flu . . . not a bad case, but serious enough to lay me up for five days. In that time came Friday, make-up day for the Saturday theatre page. Jim Jones made up my page, wrote it, stayed with it through the make-up, corrected it and passed it for the final editions. I knew that Jim could do it and I also knew that he was fair enough to give every other press agent an equal break with his theatres. The managing editor and the business office knew he was doing it, and they were satisfied.

Sure enough . . . just as the drama editor finished, I heard the city editor yell: "Hey, Jones, take that 'phone on the next desk. Mack is on the wire; he's got a story down at police headquarters. Give me a half column on it."

Jim Jones is a press agent able to meet newspaper men on an equal basis . . . he has nothing to be ashamed of; he can write as well as any man on that staff and—he writes as a newspaper man would. He knows the 'style' of every newspaper in town and he is able to hand in a story that needs no re-writing.

Earn Their Respect

The greatest asset a press agent can possibly have is the respect of the newspaper men with whom he is doing business . . . upon whom he depends for the publicity of the theatre he represents. He meets these men on a common ground; he is one of them—he knows their racket . . . he can talk to them about their babies, homes, golf game—and does.

Newspaper men form the clanniest clan that ever clanned . . . to the majority of them a press agent is a disappointed newspaper man—one without sufficient ability to hold a job with a newspaper, but smart enough to drag down a bigger salary as a much despised press agent. Once you gain their friendship, their respect—you can have anything of their's to command.

Writing ability isn't always a necessity but—fair play is.

Never fake a newspaper . . . you may get a raft of publicity with a fake, but the Lord help you the next time you try it. Manufacturing news, writing good readable copy about something that never happened, isn't faking. Faking is making a sucker out of a newspaper man or a newspaper . . . and there is no pardon for that crime.

No theatre can exist, let alone prosper, without the co-operation of a newspaper. Carry all the display advertising your budget allows, and without the necessary publicity—the art and the stories, where will you get? You rarely hear a patron say . . . "Oh, I saw your ad in this morning's paper." . . . But you will hear they say . . . "I saw a story about that picture in the newspaper."

What makes stars . . . advertising or publicity? What makes theatres . . . advertising or publicity and good will? The answer is apparent.

"When In Rome . . ."

If you are a press agent . . . you become a newspaper man when you walk into a newspaper office and, if you're in Rome, you'll do as the Romans do. Study the newspaper profession . . . learn their laws and rules—and then follow those laws. Ask for nothing that you, if you happened to be sitting back of that editor's desk—wouldn't give.

Remember this . . . white space, in a newspaper, costs money. It is just the same as the seating capacity of your theatre. You have to make each seat in your theatre pay a return on the investment . . . your rent is probably based on the cost of the property, film rental and operating expense and . . . capacity. So it is with a newspaper . . . there are so many columns to fill. So many of them with news . . . the larger proportion with display advertising. You will never offend the business office of any newspaper by trying to be a friend of that newspaper . . . by trying to help fill those columns set aside for display advertising. Many pictures present opportunities for "co-operative advertising"—never overlook one of these opportunities and, by the same token—never impose upon your local merchants by asking them to participate in such advertising if you do it only to fill your space . . . and forget the fact that they are advertising to sell their own merchandise.

A Fifty-Fifty Deal

Frequently the business office controls the policy of the editorial department as it relates to the amount of publicity for theatres. When you find this—you may be pretty sure it is the result of the shady tactics of some press agent or theatre manager who pulled a fast one on the newspaper men. The average newspaper man, either owner, editorial executive or business manager—realizes that the newspaper needs the theatre just as much as the theatre man needs the newspaper. They are willing to play the game on a fair fifty-fifty arrangement . . . until some smart aleck tries to chisel and then—it will take months of the time and created by the fast worker. Sometimes an effort for the honest manager to undo the harm owner, editor or manager has a personal dislike against theatres and theatre men . . . then free space copy and co-operation is cut to the minimum—when you find this—work, as you never worked before, to remedy the situation. It will take all your tact, your ingenuity . . . perseverance and good manners—will power and kindliness to overcome it . . . but overcome it you must—much of your success in that operation will depend upon it.

Be Yourself

All the advances for friendliness between newspaper and theatre need not be made by the theatre man . . . familiarity may breed that well known contempt. Don't force yourself . . . study every move you make and yet, by all means, be natural. You can overplay your hand and be worse off than before. Don't be weak-kneed with a newspaper; don't be servile. Don't be a pest and wear out your welcome. Don't expect too much and—at the same time . . . don't give everything and get nothing in return. Play a give-and-take game . . . but play it fair.

Don't wait until the moment you need a newspaper, badly—before you make friends and, you may need the good-will of a newspaper almost any minute. When you are in the business of catering to the public—you can never tell when something is going to happen . . . when you will want a story "killed" or a story published. You know, there are always two sides to every story—you may want the public to hear our side of the story.

With sensible understanding and appreciation of the difficulties of each other . . . there is no reason why the theatre and the newspaper can not work in perfect harmony. Without this understanding, this harmony both are liable to lose . . . in profit, in the pleasure of business operation and civic good for the community you both serve.

The newspaper and the theatre have much in common . . . both may influence public opinion . . . working together they may do much good for a city or a community. The theatre screen is a powerful medium; it ranks with the columns of the newspaper in carrying a message to the public . . . then why should not the newspaper man and the theatre man join hands for the success of each other and for the prosperity of the people upon whom they depend.

Theatre rates have often, in the past, been the rock upon which the friendship of the newspaper and the theatre has been split. Study the rate that you are paying . . . what are you getting for it? Circulation, coverage, space, good will, co-operation . . . all enters into that price. How does your rate compare with the local merchants rate, with the national rate? If you have a complaint . . . carry it to the newspaper, but—be mighty sure you have a good case before you go there. Don't just say . . . "I think we're paying too high a rate." Why is the rate too high . . . what other city of the same size as yours with a newspaper of the same circulation . . . has a better rate; how many papers are there in that town? If you have a just and fair complaint, you will probably get an adjustment.

Remember this . . . newspapers and theatres can both reach success by working together. A newspaper fight never brought profit to either . . . and the scars remained over old wounds.

Play fair with your newspaper friends!

CONTRASTING ADVERTISEMENTS

The ads you see on each side represent the result of a situation in which Larry Carroll found himself this summer when his assistant was away on vacation. With two houses to manage in Burlington, Vt., the Majestic and Flynn, he conceived the idea of running contrasting ads side by side so each would command an equal share of readers' attention. Note that the ad on "Woman of Experience" is fashioned in scene mat style, except for the fill-in space always reserved for special copy; and that the other one on "Caught" is regular run of ads, with copy appearing in direct contrast to the dark effect of its mate.

There are many similar situations existing all over this country where one manager has charge of advertising for two or more theatres and we don't doubt for a minute that these men endeavor to keep their ads distinctive. If, however, they are looking for ideas along these lines, we believe Carroll's suggestion will help out and are therefore reproducing a sample of his work.

We also note that he recently sponsored the publishing of quite an elaborately gotten-up "Telo-Index" booklet, name of theatre appearing on front cover and each succeeding index page carrying a local ad on reverse side. All of which, we judge was prepared at no cost to theatre. Thanks for the ad suggestions, Larry, and let the Club hear from you again.

Jack Simons Sends "Politics" Over Top At Loew's Rochester

As a result of the well managed advance campaign waged on "Politics" by Jack Simons, manager of Loew's Rochester Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., this house opened with this picture to second best opening day in the history of the theatre.

As a starting wedge he tied up with two leading newspapers for contests, one entitled, "Should Rochester Have a Woman Mayor?" and the other, "What Would Happen If All Women in Rochester Went on Strike?" The former was scheduled in advance and the latter spotted during run of picture in order to keep interest alive.

Obtaining permission from city officials, an airplane was engaged to hover over the downtown district for thirty minutes for the purpose of dropping literature; and on another night an old fashioned parade, red lights, banners and whoopee was pulled off. The city is very strict in reference to parades of this sort but Simon's salesmanship won over the authorities.

Other advertising included the release of several hundred gas-filled balloons, with election card tied to each and five cards having passes good for one; distribution of 5,000 circulars in the 6 Wahl-green drug stores, with store ad on one side and theatre ad on other, and stickers hung up in store concerning "Politics" Sundae; 10,000 "Hattie Burns for Mayor" cards distributed in cigar stores, autos and handed out on street, and two pen and ink cartoon drawings on Dressler in campaign pose and other stories.

We understand Simons pinch-hit for Dave Nolan in the above campaign and he is to be congratulated for obtaining such fine results. This theatre is another entrant in the M-G-M contest and the Club again wishes luck to all concerned.

Real Vice Scandal Helped Borenstein Exploit A Picture

Accommodating public officials in a nearby city promoted a vice scandal which made some excellent copy for Joseph S. Borenstein, manager of the Stadium Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., when he advertised the showing of "Vice Squad."

Five days in advance of picture, a story broke in the Boston papers, which are widely read in Woonsocket, about a vice scandal in Boston implicating one of the vice squad on a graft charge. Of course, similar stories appeared in the local papers.

This seemed to be almost a perfect break as the story coincided in many respects with the picture.

Borenstein collected clippings, headlines and mast heads. When he had enough, he made up a one-sheet with them. It made a very interesting display for the lobby.

That certainly was a sweet break for Borenstein to receive; however, we note that he was fully alive to the possibilities that were presented. The stunt was timely and served an excellent purpose in exploiting the picture.

Clark Has A Good Method For Testing Taste On Westerns

Should you wish to test your town's reactions on Western pictures we can heartily recommend a method recently used by Arthur Clark, manager of the Indiana Theatre, Bloomington, Ind.

Announcement was made from stage and by herald that on a following Saturday Hoot Gibson would appear in an action picture and that subsequent attendance would constitute a vote in favor or otherwise of future booking of this kind of entertainment. It was also stated that the herald and one paid kid admission would admit two children at this performance.

The first Saturday approximately 600 kids were on hand for the show. Then another herald was issued, stating that "Here Is What You Asked For" and went on to explain that in view of marked interest from both juveniles and adult patrons, another especially arranged program of action pictures would be presented the next Saturday. On this date over 1,000 attended and on the third Saturday there were 1,200, all in face of "penny matinee" opposition.

The above experiment certainly packed a wallop and it's also interesting to note that the stunt brought out both kids and grown-ups, proving beyond a doubt that many communities are ripe for an innovation of this sort. Thanks for the suggestion, Arthur, and also for introducing Club member Ebron Crowe, the new manager of the Von Ritz Theatre at Bedford, Ind. We shall look forward to hearing what he's doing to put over shows and will also want to know about your own future activities.

RAYNOR SERIAL CAMPAIGN ON "DANGER ISLAND" A HUGE SUCCESS!

It's times like these that test theatre management and show brains. The answer to the problem usually is, give the people what they want. Up until this year, it has been more or less of an axiom of the picture business that big theatres should not or could not, play motion picture serials. Then a very alarming feeling permeated the industry. The younger generation were not being properly inducted into the enjoyment of moving pictures. The sophisticated drama didn't appeal to them. Nothing was given them to take its place.

Among other big theatres, the Fox Theatre in Detroit, seating six thousand, decided to experiment with a motion picture serial. They picked out "Danger Island" as being a highly adventurous title and story. They set it into the Fox Theatre first for five days a week, two shows a day, 11 A. M. and 6 P. M. Naturally, Bill Raynor, manager of the Fox Theatre, didn't let the serial in cold. Having made up his mind to try a serial, he very wisely gave it all of the preparation and exploitation that he would a feature picture. Furthermore, he directed this to the children.

For one thing, there is at the Fox in Detroit a dancing school—the Fox Theatre Dancing School, which has something like 20,000 youngsters on its rolls as patrons. It is one of the ingenious devices of this theatre to intrigue the youth of Detroit and to get them in the habit of going to the Fox, having their parents go to the Fox, and having the Fox Theatre widely talked about amongst the younger generation. One of the stunts that Manager Raynor planned was a big picnic for this tremendous dancing class. Ingenious invitations were sent out, embodying the circus herald idea, the members of the class were invited first to see the serial at the Fox Theatre, and then to join the management in a big picnic. This took place on the opening day of the serial and more than five thousand kiddies answered in person this invitation. With their chaperones they crowded the theatre to the guards.

Ten thousand of the heralds with a special imprint were used. On the big buses which took the children to the picnic were displayed stock banners provided in connection with the "Danger Island" serial, and a number of snipes, half-sheets and one-sheet posters. The Fox lobby display for the serial also was unique and consisted of an adaptation of the banner, with the frames containing a great number of stills from the production.

All of these things produced the desired result. Fortunately, there was the kind of reaction in the audience which definitely told the management that their efforts had been successful and that the Detroit audience was ripe for serials. Here are some of the ways in which this reaction evidenced itself. In the first place, theatregoers complained on the days that the serial was not shown, until the management put it in for the full seven days. On the fourth episode of the serial, an experiment was tried. The serial had been shown previously at eleven and at six. With the fourth episode, the serial was shown after the feature picture, instead of ahead of it. A great many people walked out of the show after the feature was over. So many of them walked right smack up to the office and wanted to know where the serial was, and why it wasn't being shown that day, that the management was convinced that a great many people came on purpose to see "Danger Island." As a result of this, Mr. Raynor not only restored the feature to its accustomed place in the program, but he purchased other serials and will show them at each program as he is showing "Danger Island." As will be noticed in the advertisement of "The Spider," the time at which the serial is shown is definitely specified. This is a concrete result of the experiment of changing the time around. No other feature of the bill has any opening hour specified.

Now then, you so-called, smart showmen, let's see what you can do with a serial of such fine adult and child appeal as "Danger Island." What happened in Detroit to Bill Raynor, and he's no slouch, can happen to you. If you've turned up your nose in the past at serials, turn it down and get yourself set to try something that has never been in the experimental stage; it's been tried and proven highly successful and will always be so long as managers are smart enough to get behind the advertising and exploitation of a "good"serial and plug it like hell until every customer in the community wants to see it. And having come and seen the first episode they should certainly clamor for everyone of the other chapters.

Get busy now, Book yourself a good serial . . . Give it a good campaign . . . Devote sufficient space in your newspaper ads . . . Make up some snappy trailers . . . Pull picture or treasure hunt for the youngsters to start it off . . . Then watch how the attendance records go to smash. It's in the bag fellows; don't be caught napping.

L. P. WEAVER SAYS:

"I have been keeping up with the ideas and stunts issued each week in the ROUND TABLE section and have profited in many cases by using a number of stunts."

Manager, Publix Rialto Theatre, Phoenix, Arizona.

PEP UP THE MERCHANTS!

Now, more than at any other time in the past, is the critical moment to inject some much needed enthusiasm and optimism into the merchants of your community.

For months now they have been deep in a slump and allowing themselves to become so dull and listless that it is naturally reflected in their business and their establishments.

No one is better fitted for the task of pulling these former peppy shop-keepers out of this condition and back to normalcy. By normalcy we mean, back to bigger and better advertising; brighter stores; bigger displays; attractive windows, etc., etc.

Set the pace for every merchant in your community to follow. Make YOUR theatre the show-place of the town. Brighten up; pep up; make your theatre front as attractive as is possible; create and maintain an optimistic trend in your newspaper advertising. All these things will tend to boost an otherwise stagnant community back to life.

Regardless of how bad conditions may have been it's entirely up to the merchants to bring back prosperity so far as your own town or city is concerned. A "Prosperity Week" sponsored by the newspaper, the theatre and the stores will attract county-wide attention and undoubtedly stimulate buying among the town folks and those from the outlying communities.

But they will never do it unless someone starts the ball arolling and gets some pep into the town. The theatres have much to gain by getting behind such a movement.

This Club has a host of aggresive members who are entirely capable of being leaders in a movement of this kind. On account of existing conditions throughout the country we hold that business men will lend an attentive ear to any scheme which will help business get on its feet. So, go to it, boys!

SHOW THEM THE WAY. THEY'LL FOLLOW.

HOW DO YOU LIKE THIS AD?

We liked it. And, what's more, we had an idea YOU would like it too; that's why we reproduced it here. And while on the discussion, you may well ask, "Why do you like it?" and we would have to say, "Because it attracted our attention on a page jammed full of other theatrical advertising!"

We've not had enough time to check up and learn whether it is the product of the live-wire manager who used it, or whether it is part of the ad campaign of the producer. So we're gonna keep it a secret for a week or two until we can find out.

But it is a "pip." Has everything a good ad should have. Attracts attention, commands interest and certainly creates a desire to "see the picture." And the advice they give you sounds good to us. "What this country needs is a darn good laugh!" No one will argue the sense of that advice. The country needs plenty of good laughs, and the theatres can give it to them via advertising and good pictures that will tickle the palate of the most discriminating movie fan.

And get a load of the face in this ad. Note the expression, take an inventory of your own reaction as you look it over. Don't you agree that this would make any reader of a newspaper look twice? Maybe the country does need some darned good laughs, but it also needs theatremen who can make up lots more advertising along these lines, too.

(Listen, Nat. Please drop us a line an' let us know the answer to paragraph two. We've been rushed to death and can't get around to checking it up ourselves. Thanks.)

What this country needs is a darn good laugh!

Bill Levey Used Reporter Scheme To Good Results

A desire of many people to be a society reporter was the idea used in an ad addressed to his community by Bill Levey, manager of the Beacon Theatre, Port Washington, N. Y., when stirring up advance interest in "Up For Murder."

He tied up with the newspaper to publish an ad which stated that free passes to this picture would be awarded those who sent in best write-ups on the next party they attended, or any social news items they happened to hear of. Stories were limited to 50 words and contestants were cautioned to get all facts. The newspaper stated that it would print all interesting items.

The newspaper naturally gave the large ad gratis for the reason that the tie-up would prove a source of some interesting news items for the society columns; and in addition contributed a full column story "interview" with Lew Ayres, the picture theme tying in nicely with the whole scheme. This looks like a winning tip, boys, with this picture or any other which deals with a similar theme. So make a call on your editor and see if you can't sell him the same idea.

Goldsmith Doubled Usual Gross With Big Stage Wedding

A stage wedding put over on the last night of a picture doubled the usual gross of the Majestic Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J. This house is managed by A. S. Goldsmith and he was assisted by District Manager Bunny Bryan and Publix publicity man, Ray Puckett.

Paving the way for introduction of the idea before a committee, Goldsmith was accompanied to a Chamber of Commerce luncheon by his two associates and Bryan was given the floor. At the end of a twenty minute talk, the trade body agreed to co-sponsor the affair and all members present signed up.

With this as a starter the trio got busy signing up other leading merchants until 25 names were on the dotted line. All merchants agreed to donate one or more articles for the hope chest and to carry day, date and place mention of the event in local newspaper ads for a period of 10 days prior to night of stage wedding. The merchants also displayed give-aways in their windows with displays publicizing the affair. The society editor of a local paper was also contacted and as a result gave wide mention of the approaching wedding in these columns. The theatre sold the attraction on the screen but did not give any merchant mention. The hope chest and other gifts were displayed in the lobby.

Most any stunt that Bunny Bryan and his boys put their shoulders to generally goes over with a bang and this one wasn't any exception. The merchants were satisfied and the house piled up double receipts; hence, everybody was happy. Perth Amboy is an industrial city with a large percentage of Hungarian, Polish and Czech population and it was not difficult to obtain consent from a couple for the event.

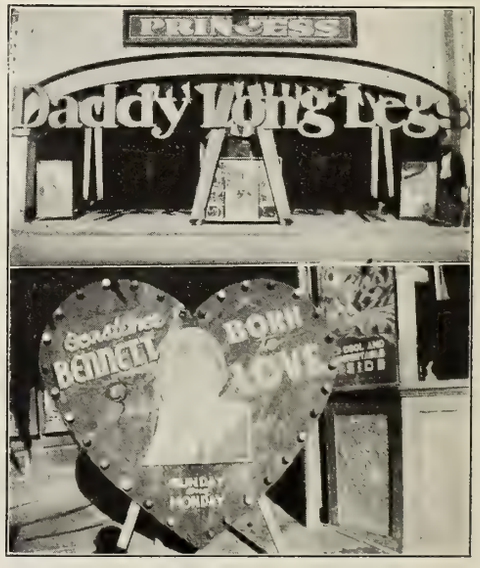
Poag Strung Long Legs Around Lobby For Effective Gag

P. J. Poag and his able assistant manager J. W. Kessler are still turning out fronts and displays for the Princess Theatre, Del Rio, Texas, and we are again presenting two recent examples of their handicraft.

When playing "Daddy Long Legs" they once more resorted to the use of large cut-out letters to display the picture title across the entire front. An assortment of these letters is always kept in stock at the theatre and outside of a little brightening up are available at short notice to produce an attractive sign. As additional atmosphere "long legs" were suspended from various points in the lobby and we believe you will be able to discern these in the photo.



The other portion of the illustration shows an effective display made up for "Born to Love." It was cut in the shape of a heart, colored red, and illuminated with 32 lights in red, blue and yellow colors, arranged so as to give a "chasing" effect. It was placed in the front portion of the lobby where it came in for its full share of attention from Del Rio's amusement shoppers.

It is always a pleasure to know what these two enterprising showmen from the big state are doing and we hope that P. J. will continue to keep his fellow Round Tablers advised on the different stunts employed at the Princess. Now that the new season is here we're going to count upon him passing along some other interesting information.

A. J. Pickett's Live Window Display On "Secret Call" Good

A live window display recently arranged by A. J. Pickett, district publicity representative for Publix in Arizona, proved an excellent plug for "Secret Call" when this picture played the Rialto Theatre, Phoenix.

From the local telephone company he promoted a regulation switchboard and had one of the mechanics hook up dry cells so that by pressure on push buttons placed along the floor in front of board, the operator could cause lights to come on, indicating an incoming call. The circuit was arranged so that when the plug made contact the light would go out, as in regular communication work. In addition to supplying an experienced girl operator, the company also donated head receiver and several sets of French 'phones.

He then obtained a two-button "mike" from the local radio station and placed it on the desk of the switchboard, so that when the girl's voice uttered the familiar telephone chatter it could be heard from a loud speaker rigged outside on the store roof. The necessary transforming and amplifying apparatus was also obtained gratis from the radio station. Pickett wrote the announcements for the girl, all of course, plugging "Secret Call," theatre and playdates and stressing the part the telephone and operator played. Between the announcements the girl would go through acts of making calls, saying "number please" and "are you awaiting."

While the photograph shows merchandise in the window it was only placed there for a short time in order for a picture to be taken for the clothing wholesaler, the merchant figuring that the live window draw was sufficient in the way of advertising. He was in the midst of a clearance sale at the time and welcomed the publicity.

Pickett is always putting over some worthwhile stunt down in his section of the country and this is another example of his excellent work. About the only expense attached to it was probably the girl's time for he obtained all accessories from the telephone and radio companies. Keep it up, A. G., and the next time you put over another let the Club hear from you.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

From candy boy to manager may sound like an Horatio Alger title, but it summarizes the theatre career of Harry A. Sefton, manager of the Fox-Orpheum Theatre, Wichita, Kan.

Harry Sefton

But to get back to his first job. His mother was in need of support at the time Harry was 13 years of age and they gave him the candy-selling job in the Princess Theatre, Wichita. You couldn't hold a good boy down and so we visualize the rapid promotions from the ballyhooing of sweets to respectively program boy, usher, doorman and ticket seller. From this point on it was just a short leap to the post of manager and next we find him at the helm of this same house, purveying musical comedy, stock and vaudeville.

He came in contact with motion pictures when he took over the management of the Palace and Miller Theatres and when his outfit obtained control of the Orpheum he was placed in charge. He's been there ever since, being retained when Fox-West Coast acquired this house.

He is an active member of several fraternal and business organizations and thinks show business is the best on earth, and with that remark we take it he hasn't any intention of ever quitting the game.

SCHOOL DAYS ARE BACK AGAIN!

And after the first few weeks of it the youngsters are all set for whatever your theatre has to offer in the way of special shows and kiddie attractions.

Among other things; have you tried to work out an arrangement whereby the school passes on your Saturday shows as being desirable for children? Do they announce this fact at assembly or post it somewhere around the school building? Is it mentioned in the school paper (if they publish one)?

It is at this time of the year that the most successful kiddie klubs and matinee gags are promoted. If started off on the right foot, the momentum may carry it well into the next year. But whatever you plan to do should be done now, not in December.

Start one of those smashing serials off now. It will get the kids into the habit of attending regularly every Saturday. And don't forget to run that serial once during the night performance. You'd be surprised to learn how many adults are keen for serials.

Brodie's Campaign On "Politics" Gave House A Good Week

A well balanced campaign, consisting of more or less standardized forms of picture exploitation, brought in a good week's business to Ellis Brodie, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Haverhill, Mass., when playing "Politics." Brodie is another entrant in the M-G-M contest for prizes for the best job turned out on this picture and we present below a brief account of what he did.

He started off with distribution of 2,000 heralds printed by a local printing concern. These were in the form of a political circular and were carried from house to house. The entire job cost $4.50.

Then fifty telegrams of the night letter class were sent out to prominent local clubs, social organizations, factories and department stores. The copy read, "Big Rally at the Paramount Theatre Today. Vote the Straight Laugh Ticket. Elect Marie Dressler for Mayor," etc., and was signed by Polly Moran. Through a special arrangement made with the local manager of the telegraph company the messages were sent out at the rate of ten cents apiece, or $5 for the lot.

For a street bally he hired a truck and covered all sides with oil cloth. The copy on cloth was in political style to give it the campaign effect. Three boys were placed inside the truck to hold banners high over their heads while another whooped it up with the continuous walloping of a base drum. Horns and other noise-makers were used to vary the din as the truck was driven through all parts of the city. When night came red flares were added to produce additional campaign color. The photo shows the truck parked in front of the theatre.

Newspaper advertising was divided evenly between stars and title and the comedy angles were played up with catchy copy. One ad that arrested the attention of all readers was headed, "An Open Letter to Every Voter," the last word being set in 96 pt. type.

For window displays he secured generous space from five of the leading stores in town for the placing of stills and copy. These were put out three days before opening and remained there during the run.

Well, Ellis, that was waking up Haverhill's interest in a picture sure enough and we're glad to know you made out so well at the box office. By the way, we note that you're serving "tonic" free of charge to patrons every matinee these days.

WHAT ABOUT IT? ASK GUY JONES!

Many managers like to boost a few merits of their house's service; yet hate to come out point blank with a boost in their newspaper ads. Here's a way to do so; if used right and regular it may create more interest in your ads.

Use a catch, using the words as near like those of the picture title as possible, thus:

"SECRET SIX"

It's no secret, that our sound system is sound.

"BROADMINDED"

That's us! We realize the public demands real pictures; here's one.

"ANNABELLE'S AFFAIRS"

Our affairs are your affairs. We invite your suggestions.

"NAUGHTY FLIRT"

We don't flirt with cheap pictures—you can depend on us.

Managers who like to work crossword puzzles may get a kick out of getting us a line for each picture. If you happen to be real good on catch lines, you may get a good many people interested in how you are going to use the words of your next picture.

Down-Town Method Of Tie-Up Used By Ettig For Suburbs

Neighborhood theatres may be able to cash in the same as Erdman F. Ettig, manager of the Sterling Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., did if they successfully follow out a simple method of merchandising stunt which he has been using to excellent advantage as a means of increasing general patronage for his house.

With every adult admission purchased at the box office the patron is handed a card bearing the names of three or more merchants and notice to effect that the bearer is entitled to receive a 10 per cent discount on every $1 cash purchase at any one of these stores. In addition to the card he also gets out an 8x10 circular, with the centre column devoted to ads and the two outside columns carrying a two to three weeks program of theatre attractions. The head reads, "Sterling Theatre Greater Show Period," and attention is again called to taking advantage of the offered discount at stores. In both instances the merchants paid entire cost of cards and circulars.

Ettig is passing the above suggestion along because he feels that some neighborhood theatre managers may be under the impression that merchandising activities of this nature is more or less confined to downtown theatres and stores. In his case he has proved that these tie-ups, on a smaller scale, can also be made in the suburban zones and thinks that some fellow Club member may be able to cash in on his plan. Continue the good work, Erdman, and let us hear from you again.

Some Parade Put Over By Di Pesa To Sell Picture

A political parade that literally "tore the city wide open" (to quote from his report) was recently staged by Joseph A. Di Pesa, publicity director of the Loew State and Orpheum Theatres, Boston, Mass., when "Politics" played the State.

The bally consisted of a band, sirens, cow bells, fire bells, red fire and the frequent simultaneous tooting of all auto horns while on parade. With the help of a motor-cycle officer, all traffic signal lights were ignored as the 25 cars, preceded by two policemen on motor-cycles, swept through the main thoroughfares of the city. The services of an eloquent speaker were engaged for the occasion and at strategic points along the line of march he addressed the crowds that gathered. The parade started at 8:15 P. M. and dispersed in front of the State at 9:30 P. M. 10,000 "Elect Hattie Burns Mayor" cards were distributed along the route.

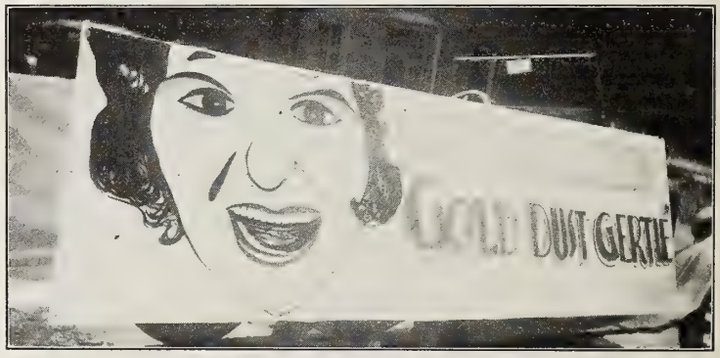
We're sorry that we can't reproduce photos showing the Mayor of the city casting a vote for Marie Dressler, and some others we hear were shot during this campaign, but these are lacking so that's that. However, we can believe Di Pesa when he states that it was one of the greatest ballys ever pulled off in Boston, even if he is not quite sure that the police officials still feel the same way about him on account of not anticipating such widespread activities. Anyway, it was a great stunt and inasmuch as this campaign will also figure in the M-G-M contest we regret that we are unable to present a more detailed account.

Bevel Bringing In Patrons With A Pay Night Once A Week

If you could read the one-sheet display at the right in the small photo it would inform you that L. W. Bevel, manager of the Princess Theatre, Harriman, Tenn., is putting on a "Pay Night" every Wednesday evening and that each adult would have a chance to draw from a box an envelope containing from 1 cent to $5 in coin of the realm.

The other photo will give you an idea of what this Round Tabler can do with a paint brush; in fact, he does all the art work for his theatre. The poster of Winnie Lightner represents one side of a Ford auto and had a blue background. The Eagle Wings on each side were of brown shades and the colors at the top were blends of green, purple and orange. Another little stunt he did in connection with the Lightner picture was to suspend a shadow box from the marquee, done in light green with snow effect of white and light blue to act as a lure during the exceptionally hot weather prevailing at that time.

In an effort to stir up his rural customers he's also been mailing out a post card with a two-for-one message. Instead of a plain printed copy the entire invitation is done in hand-drawn lettering which certainly lends a distinct tone to the card. Of course, a cut was made for printing purposes, and the run was made with green ink. The message leads off with, "There's another Good Picture at the Harriman." Playdates follow and a ham dat the bottom points to "Be Our Guest," etc.



There's no use in stating that Bevel is always on the job of showselling because most members are familiar with the kind of work he turns out. It will be easy for every Club member to understand that his little money gag is bringing patrons to his theatre for a stunt of this kind is bound to create interest. His displays are interesting, particularly in view of the fact that he makes them himself.

HOBNOBBING WITH THE GOVERNOR!

Novel Advertising Campaign Featured By James H. McKoy

Just a short time before "Politics" played the Olympia Theatre, Miami, Fla., where Jas. H. McKoy holds forth as manager, a political upheaval affecting all principal officials hit the city and played right into this manager's hands for the inauguration of a splendidly worked out advertising campaign, which beyond doubt, was largely responsible for the remarkable attendance on this picture.

He began a series of 5 inch ads seven days in advance in both newspapers, addressing his messages to both newly elected and deposed politicians. Copy was based on "If I Were You"—and carried a humorous slant on the local situation. If the ad was addressed to a former office holder, he was advised to get plenty of sleep for the next several days and then come to the theatre and get a good laugh. If vice versa, in view of the fact that all had been through strenuous times, the advice was to come and relax. Even the fire chief was told to let Miami citizens fight their own fires on picture opening day on account of the boys needing a rest.

And so it went along, each ad building up reader interest for the next one until Mack ran out of politicians and ended up with a deep two-column ad headed "If I Were YOU," and more advice to citizens.

He also arranged for a corking lobby display of figures of Dressler and Moran. From a still of "Caught Short" showing Marie Dressler at the ticket tape machine, the theatre artist made up two figures. Polly Moran was placed at one side of a handsome desk promoted from a local dealer and her hands held a large letter which could be read by everyone entering the theatre. it read, "Dear Marie: This is to inform you that you have been fired. Lovingly, Polly" (City Manager). Behind the desk was the figure of Dressler, as per photo on this page, holding on to the back of a chair. On the desk were several local papers with streamer heads screaming that the city officials had been fired. The whole display was lighted with three spots.

Another stunt that caught the public eye was a tie-up made with the Miami Elks Club, who were entertaining the Boys Elks Club Band from Tennessee. Arrangements were made to have the boys parade up the main stem, playing the "Campaign March" used in the picture. This outfit entertained the onlookers in front of the theatre before entering as guests. The photo shows how traffic was stopped as the musicians filed into the theatre.

While the above represents a few highlights of McKoy's campaign it was by no means a large part of the work he carried through. Space forbids the itemizing of a wide variety of cards, heralds, banners, and motor tie-ups used. Suffice to state that it was a splendidly handled campaign and we wish him luck as one of the entrants in Metro's contest for outstanding effort on this picture.

FREE BEER IN MILWAUKEE!

The Winter Garden

Present this label when served (this offer expires Sept. 1, 1931)."

The above blew in with the morning mail and upon checking up we find that the stunt was pulled in the new Warner Theatre, Milwaukee, a house managed by Round Tabler Harold Janecky. The Winter Garden is located in the theatre building. We trust that the reprint will furnish other Club members with inspiration for a somewhat similar tie-up.

Anniversary Week Capitalized On By Stein In Indiana

Several Indiana towns whooped it up on the occasion of local theatres celebrating their first year under the Warner banner, as the result of efforts made by L. S. Stein, district publicity and advertising director for Warners in this territory.

According to a number of tear sheets we have before us, merchants approached in all towns came through with splendid support of the event, lending cooperation to a variety of page co-op ads in newspapers. In return for the advertising the newspapers gave generous space to readers on current attractions and stories pertaining to the Warners and anniversary events.

Always associated with birthday occasions, cake played an important part in the general campaign. Each theatre was supplied with it (5,000 pieces) promoted from the Ward Baking Company. In addition, most managers made arrangements with local bakers to bake a huge cake for display in lobbies, patrons being invited to "cut themselves a piece" when leaving theatre. The cakes were, of course, donated by baker in lieu of advertising received.

Other efforts consisted of appropriately decorated theatre fronts, with festoons and special sign shop work; extra attractions booked in; several gift nites for each theatre; special trailers; special advance lobby work, and special institutional advertising.

So it all goes to show what can be done in the way of promotion based on the mere fact that a theatre has been under one banner for a year and we must admit that Stein made quite a splurge for the occasion.

Coughlan Obtained Excellent Results Selling "Dirigible"

A model dirigible mounted on the top of an Austin auto helped hang up record attendance for Burt Coughlan, manager of the People's Theatre, Maynard, Mass., when "Dirigible" played his town.

The accompanying photo will show you how the little car looked when parked in front of the theatre. Also note the two members of the staff who were dressed in aviators' clothing to lend some additional atmosphere to the stunt. The car was driven through all principal thoroughfares and outlying districts of the city.

In return for a page ad furnished by the film distributor the local paper came through nicely for Coughlan in the way of cut and readers in the news section. One full column was devoted to photos of featured players and theme of picture.

We're glad to know that Burt fared so well with this one and hope that he will continue to produce such gratifying results, at the same time not forgetting to keep us all informed as to his future activities.

Crescent Theatre Shows What Can Be Done In Small Town

If it were possible to clearly reproduce an ad used by the Crescent Theatre, Grand Haven, Mich., we would gladly do so for the reason that it presents a very good idea of what can be accomplished in typography in a small community where local newspaper facilities are limited.

The one we have before us was used in connection with a double bill and with the exception of a cut of Joe E. Brown at the top portion—the balance of the ad is set in type, nicely arranged as to style and size. Rule borders are effectively used and generous space is alloted the short subjects.

While we don't know the name of the Crescent's manager, in case he sees this little article it is to be hoped that he will furnish the Club with further accounts of what's doing in show business in Grand Haven.

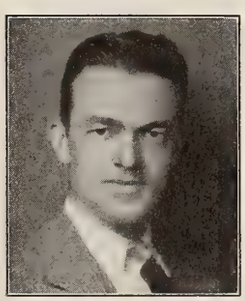
ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Thomas Cleary, present manager of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Canada, entered the amusement business at the age of 16 years, starting as usher in the Capitol Theatre under L. M. Thomas. Later on, when this house was managed by J. A. Dahn, Cleary was promoted to the position of secretary and after a period of six months was made assistant manager.



Thomas Cleary

In 1926 he went to the Palace Theatre in Montreal as assistant manager to George Rotsky, one of the best known showmen in the city, and held this post until 1928 when he was again transferred to the Capitol. A year later he left the Capitol to go with Consolidated Theatres' Orpheum Theatre, remaining there one year until he went to the Princess as assistant manager.

Cleary was born in Montreal June 23, 1904, and was educated in the local Mt. St. Louis College, and at Berkeley University, Oakland, Calif. He's always been connected with the Famous Players organization and by the tenor of his statement we don't think there's a chance of his ever straying into other fields.

TYSON HAS NEW CO-OP PLAN

George Tyson, director of publicity for Warner theatres in the Pittsburgh district, has hit upon a new plan to buy newspaper space, based on admission of newsboys to Warner houses.

As his plan now works, the newspaper virtually pays its boys' admissions through exchange of space and, according to report, the first test has proved so satisfying to both newspaper and theatres that the arrangement will be continued indefinitely. The independent footing appears to appeal to both parties concerned.

During the month of August a leading newspaper arranged for the admission of 3,000 newsboys to Warner theatres. Six parties were madeup at different times and the paper practically paid for the tickets at a slightly reduced rate by exchange of space. Tyson believes that this plan can also be sucessfully used in other cities.

Peterson Appealed To Women Patrons With A Sachet Gag

To supplement his routine advertising, C. W. Peterson, manager of the Casino Theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa, trotted out a couple of exploitation stunts designed to create interest in "Daddy Long Legs."

He promoted enough sachet powder to partially fill 2,000 small envelopes, imprinted, "just a breath of the sweetest romance ever told—Janet Gaynor in Daddy Long Legs, with Warner Baxter, etc." These were distributed in outgoing parcels of a local department store three days in advance.

For the lobby, Peterson promoted a garden arbor which was covered with artificial flowers. In the arch of the arbor hung a rustic sign reading "romance for all who enter."

Certainly, the above stunts must have had distinct appeal to women patrons, so we're handing out this tip for other members to use if they see fit. Continue the good work, "Pete," and let the Club know what else you're doing.

ADOLFO CARUSO is in charge of the United States Theatre in the famous city of Hoboken, N. J. For your further information he isn't any kin of the departed tenor of international fame, nor does he claim any relationship to Robinson Crusoe—he's just Adolfo, that's all—a former Major with the A. SOUND REPRODUCTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 98.—Suppose you start with the exciting lamp not lighted. How would you handle the fader before and after lighting it, and why? Explain your method of handling the fader at change-over. Explain, in detail, just why it is impossible to secure good results unless the projector be run at exactly the same speed the taking camera and sound recorder were run. Exactly what fault or faults will variation in taking and reproduction speeds set up?

CONCERNING EFFICIENCIES

In correspondence with John Hertner, president of Hertner Electric Company, I have received the following:

"Dear Friend Richardson: In answering your letter will say that the efficiencies of the multiple set not only vary with the condition of the set but also very much with the size of the set. For example: In the CP-400 ampere machine, the efficiency amounts to about 84. Now an overall efficiency of 84 per cent means that the efficiencies of the generator and of the motor considered separately is about 92. Taking, however, a small set of say 20 or 25 ampere capacity, if the overall efficiency is 60, it indicates that the motor or generator alone is about 77. This is arrived at by taking the square root of the combined efficiencies, that is to say, the square root of .60 is approximately .77. In other words, if the motor has an efficiency of 77 and the generator an efficiency of 77, the combined efficiency is 77 times .77, or approximately .60 and while a set of this kind probably has an efficiency of a little over 60 when it is in good condition, it may go much below that if permitted to fall into a poor state of adjustment or repair.

"Now in a set D-75-75 size which has a normal output of about .75 K.W. the efficiency runs about 71 or 72 per cent when the outfit is in good conditions, which shows that the efficiencies of the motor and generator separately are about 84.

"These figures are quite dependable, though of course they do not include ballast losses."

Well, I think your editor will have to admit he is too dumb to understand all this, but it comes from an electrical engineer than whom I think there is none better. John Hertner knows his vegetables when it comes to matters electrical and mechanical. I am going to ask him to explain just why it is that if the motor and generator both have an efficiency of 77 their combined efficiencies should drop to 60.

Later: The foregoing was submitted to Mr. Hertner, who explains as follows, though he still leaves us puzzled by his reference to liquids which foam. However, he lives not far from Canada so maybe—well, anyhow, here is what he says:

"Suppose a motor generator set absorbs 100,000 watts from the line. This is the equivalent of 134 horsepower. If the motor efficiency is 92 then it develops 92,000 watts or 123 horsepower. This is delivered to the generator. If the generator has an efficiency of 92 then it develops 92 per cent of what it receives or 85,000 watts or 113 horsepower. The overall efficiency is 92 times 92 or 84 per cent and as a check, 84 per cent of the input 100,000 watts or 134 horsepower is 84,000 watts or 113 horsepower.

"Suppose you fill a glass with milk from the bottle. In doing so you spill a quarter of the milk you pour out. Your efficiency is 75 per cent. On pouring the milk out of this glass into a second one and again spilling a quarter your efficiency is again 75 per cent but the milk in the second glass is 3/4 of 3/4 or 9/16 of what you started with and your overall efficiency would be 56.25 per cent.

"The same reasoning would apply to any other liquids except that those which foam would require more careful handling."

NOT ENOUGH RECOGNITION

There should be recognition by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences of the work of those responsible for the projection of a motion picture. The board of directors of the Academy has approved of the following awards to be presented for the current year—the award to be in each case a bronze statuette.

First—Actor's award for the best performance by an actor.

Second—Actress' award for the best performance by an actress.

Third—Director's award for the best achievement in directing.

Fourth—Cinematography award for the best achievement in cinematography.

Fifth—Sound recording award for the best achievement in sound recording.

Sixth—Art direction award for the best achievement in art direction.

Seventh—Scientific or technical award as defined in last year's rules.

Eighth—Production award for the most outstanding motion picture production.

Ninth—Writing award for the best adaptation.

Tenth—Writing award for the best original motion picture story.

That is all very well but it is to be decided by some sort of voting system, and sometimes the results of such votes hinge upon which particular individual or element has the most friends who will do active rustling for votes. However, if we grant the system to be all right, the next thing is this: Supposing all these "one to tens" do just as splendid work as the votes would indicate and their work was not well projected to the screen and through the horns —well, it seems to me the audience will think that there might have been a mistake in the award, or if that was what might be considered fine work, surely the rest must be very poor indeed.

In other words, what is the use of high grade work through all the various items of production, if in the last final act, which must in the very nature of things affect everything, the production be not placed before the audiences perfectly?

Without in any way intending to discourage such things as this, it really seems to me that under existing conditions it would be quite appropriate that the Academy add an award for superiority in projection work. Don't you think so?

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

Denver Denver

Week ending September 24

The overture by Fred Schmitt and his orchestra consisted of operatic gems, bits from "Carmen," "Manon," "Faust," "Samson and Delilah" and "Aida." A novelty background was used this week—a high fence with staff and notes on it.

The stage show, Fanchon & Marco's "About Town" idea, was entertaining and pleased the audience most of the way.

Tad and Al Waldman, blackface, had a fast line of chatter and played the mouth organ and jews harp—but with too many intentional discords on the former. A few discords are comedy, but too many are tragic and hard on the ears. Their act was too long, also.

Ben Dova hit a new note in drunk exhibits, so drunk at the start of the act that he slept standing on his head, but he sobered tremendously when he balanced on the tipsy lamppost. He performed difficult stunts on the swaying support.

Max and his five fox terriers gave the youngsters a thrill in their five minutes on the stage. The dogs acted really intelligent—but Max also proved he could put on an act without them. He is a clever contortionist as well as a dog trainer.

As a windup Joe Pasco did his bag punching. He is fast with his fists and with the help of the line, also punching bags, it made a good closing flash.

The line, a dozen, are shown in phone booths calling up men "About Town"—making dates. The booths are raised off the stage showing the orchestra back of a row of auto cutouts. In their second routine the girls are dressed to resemble traffic cops and do a traffic dance—with their huge white mitts. Then a dance with their men "About Town"—a bunch of dummies, and they finish their part of the show with an ostrich feather fan dance.

Stock for Fox-Locust

Philadelphia theatres face a new competitive threat in the field of low-priced entertainment, with the announcement that Mae Desmond, stock company star of this city, would take over the Fox-Locust, former film house, for the purpose of stock presentations, renaming the house the Locust Street. She plans to take possession October 15, offering plays on a "guest-star" basis, featuring a new Broadway celebrity each week.

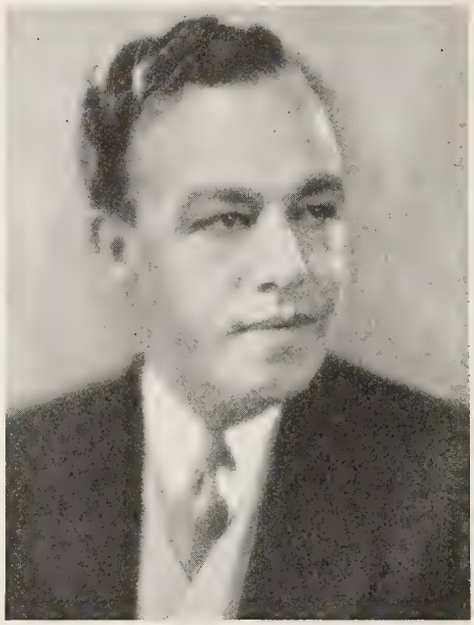
May Resume Stage Shows In Interstate Texas Houses

Stage shows may be resumed in all Interstate Texas theatres at San Antonio, Dallas, Houston and Fort Worth, adding four weeks time to the RKO intacts on that circuit. Conferences between RKO theatre operators and vaudeville bookers are endeavoring to decide whether the RKO intacts should play the circuit's own houses or those of Publix in a theatre operation pool.

K. C. Critic to Broadcast

"ACE," film and drama critic of the Kansas City Journal-Post, has been signed for a 17-week broadcast of his feature "Easy Aces," over WGN, Chicago. If he clicks, it will go over the chain.

MILTON HERTH



Here is an organist who has made of himself a decided feature in the theatre in which he works.

Herth is at the Paramount in Hammond, Indiana, and has been there since the house opened a year ago, when he was chosen to play the inaugural program. He is very well known throughout the middlewest, being one of the pioneers of community singing stunts and having been the chief organist for the Great States division of Publix and opening all of their houses for the past five years.

Milton is a graduate concert organist who has a distinct style of presenting class, novelty and community solos, and one who possesses the faculty of "selling" them with a most pleasing personality. He is not an organist who merely plays an organ, no sir, he knows construction and can even rebuild it if and when it is necessary.

STAGE SHOWS

Jersey City Stanley

Week ending September 24

Paul Ash heads this entertaining "Jazz Babies" revue. One sure thing that can be said for Ash is that he is a master at selling acts; he is one of the few masters of ceremonies who sell the performers and not themselves.

Ash first makes his appearance before the curtain and announces the opening number. This "black-out" skit for an opening is quite unusual and proved highly entertaining. The scene depicted a maternity ward in which the frantic husband waited for the glad tidings. "Dr." Ash finally appears and announces the birth of "Jazz Babies" revue, which from then on steps at a lively pace. The 12 Muriel Abbott dancers start proceedings with a snappy buck, toe and cane routine that gets them a good hand. Ash then announces a medley of numbers which the stageband plays. This is called "Romantic Rivers," and is a compilation of "river" songs. The band (a regular house unit), is ably led by Ash and proves its ability by giving a great concert. Vic Ince shows himself to be one of the best cornetists this reviewer has ever heard. Vic stops the show cold after playing a "hot" chorus of "I Ain't Got Nobody" and is forced to encore with "St. Louis Blues." He receives a great hand at the finish and could easily have encored again. Barnet and Clark, a young chap and a girl, offer a fast tap-hop which they call "The Jay Hop," and get themselves a nice reception for it. Peggy Bernier, personality girl, dressed as a young lass is a great comedienne and has the house in an uproar at her manner of presenting songs and at her stories and gags in which she uses Ash as her foil.

The Abbott Dancers, this time in gymnasium suits, again offer a snappy and well-done tap and acrobatic routine and are followed by Dolly Belle, who does a difficult high kick and acrobatic routine and gains herself a fine hand. Belle Montrose, who appears from the orchestra and does a dumb act, gets a lot of laughs but that is all that can be said for the act. The show closes with a difficult buck and acrobatic dance routine by the Abbott Girls. This is the first time in the history of this house that a troupe of this kind has been introduced individually. Miss LaNorma beautiful brunette and captain of the girls, introduces each as they come on and go into the dance. These girls are all good looking and all are accomplished dancers and assist greatly in making this a fine show.

Fox Closes Coast House

Fox has closed the California in San Diego and discontinued Fanchon & Marco shows at the Fox, as an economy measure. Fanchon & Marco units, however, are returning to Fox West Coast Seattle theatres, after a dispute between musicians and the circuit.

SLICES OF MELLIN

CHICAGO

Don Pedro, whose orchestra is heard each night of the week from the Terrace Gardens, from 12:30 to 1 o'clock over an NBC-WJZ network, became a conductor at the early age of 16. After four years in symphony and motion picture theatre work, Don is devoting his talents to dance bands. Don Pedro is a nickname, based on his family name of Peter Avelar and means Mr. Peter. He is the son of Castilian parents who moved from Mexico to New Orleans and later to San Antonio, Texas, where he came under the guidance of Hernandez the well-known Julian Paul Blatz, both famous teachers of the violin. When the lad was only 8 years old, Hernandez took him over as a protege and sponsored his early appearance in the symphony. His abiilty in interpreting the violin and xylophone is based on his musical appreciation and training.

Just to prove that while the term "gigolo" is strictly Parisian, there are gigolos to be found in the United States. Officials of the Music Corporation, in cooperation with the Hotel Lowry, St. Paul, staged a publicity campaign which brought 35 applicants for the position of professional dancing partners. The list included men with college education, some who wanted the positions for the glamour of night club life, and others who seriously wanted work as professional dancers and boasted of a complete gigolo wardrobe.

Red Engle, featured saxophonist with the Ted Weems orchestra, is a sketch artist in his spare time. Red recently completed portraits of the orchestra which will be used in lobby displays of the Weem's band.

Phil Levant, a Chicagoan with an all-Chicago orchestra, is making a hit with a seven-piece orchestra as the luncheon hour attraction at the famous College Inn of the Hotel Sherman, with daily broadcasts over station WBBM. Levant's orchestra dates back to a five-piece combination which for three years enjoyed popularity at the L'Aiglon Cafe. Later they appeared at the Vanity Fair, another Chicago night club, and this engagement was followed by a season at the Boulevards of Paris, popular St. Paul, Minn., night club.

Jean Paul King, NBC announcer, now finds himself attached to the personal staff of the chief bailiff of Cook County, with a shiny nickle badge to wear on state occasions. King acted as announcer for the "Our City" program, broadcast locally over WENR, when Albert J. Horan, chief bailiff, appeared on the program to explain to the people of Chicago the duties of his office. The next day the badge was delivered to King.

STAGE SHOWS

Omaha Orpheum

Week ending September 17

Within a fortnight a second theatre organ in Omaha has been brought from silence into beautiful melody, this time at the Omaha Orpheum, with Julius K. Johnson, Omaha's own premier organist, at the console. Johnson, who is spending two weeks visiting in this city, was prevailed to take over the console while here and truly has been giving Orpheum guests an "added attraction extraordinary," as this theatre's advertising has heralded. When we heard him he played "Waiting for Sunrise" and "The Doll Dance." Eddie Perrigio and his R-K-Olians orchestra accompanied from the pit during the second number. The console was placed in the left end of the pit, out of which it was elevated and into which it later receded. The audience had ample applause for both numbers.

After the newsreels, during which the orchestra played in those scenes which were primarily silent versions, the Zelda Bros., in "Air Antics," entertained with a trapeze act. Walking offstage like a monkey on all fours, contortions as though their hips were double-jointed, a windmill stunt in which the hands served as the axis for the body, revolving freely by use of swivel-joint hand grasps—these were some of the highspots of their act, generally excellent.

Other acts included Burns and Allen in "Dizzy"; Frank Conville, with Sunny Dale; Irving Grad, Tom Rafferty, Doris Lenihan and the Michael girls in "Dancing On."

The Burns-Allen act was one largely of jokes and repartee. The audience really laughs. "Maybe It's Love" is the song they sing as a closing feature.

Frank Conville and Miss Dale go over well. He is introduced by her as appearing through courtesy of the Metropolitan Opera company and sings a love song, holding a picture—what seems to be a frame at least—before him. It turns out to be a mirror. Gigolo acting, a little fun with a saxophone, a Charlie Chaplin stunt using tickets from a large roll to dance with the ten-cents-a-dance girl, singing and dancing, with the accompaniment of the orchestra from the pit, all combined in a neat act.

The "Dancing On" act, with its three leading players and a dancing chorus of the six Michael girls, is colorful. Miss Lenihan and the youths join in an athletic-tap dance

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week Ending September 17

"Overture Orientale" by the Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Glenn Welty precedes Fanchon & Marco's "Let's Go" Idea. Numbers include "The Kashmiri Song" sung by Orville Rennie, and "Orientale" played on the violin by Ray Brown of the Milwaukee Symphony orchestra.

The first episode of the Idea, which has been produced in "compliment to Fox Midwesco's greatest show season," is nothing more or less than one of the vaudeville Ideas, and not an unusual one either. It has a Spanish setting with Adriana, who acts as mistress of ceremonies, singing and dancing.

The Three Rhythm Queens tap dance in an entertaining fashion and give way to Adriana, who again dances a Spanish fling.

Doyle and Donnelly wisecrack and conclude their bit with a paraphrase on the "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers." Sue Russell, Hinky and Dinky get a laugh from some of the audience with crazy antics and burlesques. Miss Russell sings and dances without creating any furor.

For the finale we have the Six Gordonians who tumble about in a fashion that is not entirely unique. Their acrobatic maneuvers meet, however, with the approval of those who like that sort of entertainment.

Portland, Ore., Paramount

Week ending September 14

Ruth Roland in "The Cozy Corner" Idea made a charming mistress of ceremonies, first introducing Frank Rogers, Negro ventriloquist, who proved a most versatile porter; The Three Jays danced remarkably well, followed quickly by the Four Lamonts with high-grade clowning and tightwire work. Miss Roland received hearty applause with the song, "What Is This Thing Called Love," followed by a medley of love songs and a clever imitation of Ted Lewis, and singing "Me and My Shadow" followed by a diminutive pickaninny. The incidental music as rendered by Tommy Sandvall and his stage band was most enjoyable. Rector and Doreen put on a novel iron-jaw act. Richard Obee, well known to Portlanders on account of his association here some years ago with New York Players, is the efficient manager of this delightful unit.

Baltimore Century

Week ending September 24

"Fiesta," a Loew Capitol stage unit staged by Arthur Knorr under the personal supervision of L. K. Sidney, was announced by slides as Al Hornig, played an organ medley. The production opened with the Chester Hale Girls dancing in a setting representing the courtyard of a Spanish villa, while George Wild directed the band. Carlos Peterson and Nicholas Duks in clown costume do some pantomime and Joyce Coles joins with toe dancing. Then the clowns go into an eccentric dance finishing with solo bouncing and whirls. Coles on from left with baby carriage. Pantomime as to who is father. Comedy of twins, each presented with one. After this come Carney and Jean in their comedy chatter, dancing and song act, joined by an unnamed comic with more fun and dances with some acrobatic work. Chester Hale girls on in a hot Spanish number with suggestive dance movements that pulled nervous giggles from the audience. Joyce Coles then does a seductive Spanish dance. Next comes Joseph Pope Jones in Toreador costume singing "Mandalay," which he follows with his impression of Harris in "Green Pastures," singing "Let My People Go!" Next is Helen Kane, singing "That's the Way It Goes," "Dangerous Nan McGrew," from her picture of that name. "I Want to Be Loved by You," after which she calls on Al Hornig, organist, to join her on stage, and sings "I'm Taking a Chance With You."

Spokane Fox

Week ending September 10

Fanchon & Marco's "Modern Minstrel" idea brought back memories of days of Dockstader and George Primrose. Harry Jolson is the interlocutor, and used four end-men in the blackface, including Harry Von Fossen, an old minstrel man. Esther Campbell, an attractive birdlike songster, put over a melodious whistling number, and was generous with a closing number, "Whistling in the Dark," illustrated by the chorus with dark lanterns. The closing spectacle with the girls suspended against the back drop playing huge colored musical instruments was particularly appealing. Jules Buffano, master of ceremonies with his band, scored heavily, with his play songs of another day.

Organist at Cleveland House

The RKO Palace in Cleveland has engaged Joe Vero as organist, following its policy of offering a larger performance rather than reduce admission, as all other first runs have.

ORGAN SOLOS

RON & DON (Brooklyn Fox) presented for the opening program of their second engagement a special solo called "Our Birthday Party," which commemorates the Fox theatre's third anniversary. Don again was seated at the big pit console while Ron was at the baby stage console. They opened with a specially written lyric about the anniversary party to the tune "Smile Darn Ya," and then went into the singing of "By My Side,"a special challenge chorus between the boys and girls to the tune "Got the Bench," another special, written to the tune "Just a Gigolo," a whistling and singing chorus of "Whistling in the Dark," and a final chorus of "Million Dollar Baby." Just before the final chorus, Don surprised the audience by singing a Jewish version of "River Shannon," and though it was sung in dialect and in a comedy vein, the good tone quality of his voice was evident.

ESTHER LEAF (Omaha Paramount) has the console artistically fitted with a jeweled colored card upon which colored lights are permitted to play with decided effect. As an opening number Miss Leaf plays the "Orpheus" overture. Then, as something individual and decidedly unique, she announces that she will accompany her sister, who also will play the organ. Her sister, Ann Leaf, then appears at a console in a sound-film projected upon the screen. The screen announcement is that Ann Leaf will play "Songs from the Organ," that she will accompany Ben Alley, who sings "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain." Her reception indicates that the customers again want the organ on the program.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio, Texas) offered an organ solo of his own arrangement and he called it "Looking Backwards." Opening the musical presentation with "Daisy, Daisy," he followed with a group of comical song slides depicting the style and ways of yesterday. Next he rendered "In the Good Old Summertime" with several advertising slides used in the days of the magic lantern and these got many a hearty laugh. This was followed by "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" and "Let Me Call You Sweetheart." The organist received a great big hand.

HAROLD RIEDER (Jersey City Stanley) presented an entertaining solo called "Radio Popularity Contest," which was built up in a manner to give the reigning radio favorites and the songs associated with them a big hand. Rieder opened by announcing the solo and explaining how the winner could be determined at the finish. This of course was to be determined by the greatest applause for the particular star. Just before the singing of each number, a photo of the artist was shown and then those in the audience who favored this star sang the song. The numbers used were "Just One More Chance," "For You," "In My Arms," "Many Happy Returns of the Day," and "Love Letters in the Sand."

EDDIE SCHWARTZ (Brooklyn Bushwick), engaged as guest organist for the 20th anniversary program of this RKO house, had to work under difficulties but succeeded in making the audience sing beyond all expectation. Unfortunately the house is not equipped with a slide machine and the organist was forced to play oldtimers and songs that have been outstandingly popular.

Using a "mike" to make his announcements, Eddie "sold" the idea of singing right from the start. The numbers were "Hail, Hail, the Gang's all Here," "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "School Days," his own singing of "Moon Comes Over the Mountain," a chorus of the same song for the audience to sing, "Beach With You," "Moonlight Saving Time," and a final chorus of "East Side West Side." The solo was very well done and apparently (from the applause at finish) the organist would be a box-office attraction in no time at this house if kept on.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) in offering "Your Part of the Program" is assisted by Adriana, of Fanchon & Marco's "Let's Go" Idea, who sits atop the organ to applaud the audience's effort at song. His numbers include "It's the Girl," "Many Happy Returns of the Day," "Long, Long Trail" and "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams."

WARNER BROS. BEACON THEATRE, NEW YORK CITY

PERSONALITY — YOUTH — SHOWMANSHIP

HELLO EVERYBODY

Well the main thing along the Great White Way this week is the opening of B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre. . . . This house as you no doubt know was formerly the Colony. . . . Every type of show has played here and it looks as if Mr. Moss has finally hit the right kind of entertainment for this particular house. . . . The opening bill, headed by Joe E. Brown is called "Varieties" and is a 12-scene revue that is easily as good if not better than many shows on Broadway at the present time. . . .

Have you heard that new German song called "Call Me Darling, Call Me Sweetheart, Call Me Dear," . . . It sure is a peach. . . . Santly Bros. are the American publishers. . . . Dorothy Dick has written the English text and has gotten the appeal in her words that the music calls for. . . .

Edwin H. (Buddy) Morris, vice-president of the Music Publishers Holding Corp., a subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, left last Sunday for the west coast. . . . While in Hollywood he will confer with Warner and First National studio executives regarding musical embellishments of future productions. . . . He will also make a survey of his company's branches in the far west as well as meet the various sales representatives of the corporation. Sales campaigns will also be mapped out in all of the Coast cities.

Art Hays, who has been away from Memphis for the past year, received a welcome on his return to the RKO Orpheum, that few organists can boast of. . . . Art, even after a year's absence, is still the "fair-haired boy" of Memphis. . . . The town's leading citizens, together with five or six of the leading societies and clubs welcomed him back with a two-block parade, a police escort and music from bands and a radio truck. . . .

Do you remember the singing team of Harm & Nee? . . . Charley, the eldest, while playing St. Louis "fell" for little Babs Lewis, of the Lewis Sisters. . . . He didn't give her a chance to catch her breath, just hustled her away and got married. . . . Babs and her sister have been lobby entertainers in the B & K theatres, Chicago for the past year . . . and now that Babs is married there is no more Lewis Sisters, but there is a new team known as the Three Ryans and they are playing an RKO route now. . . . Good-luck kids. . . .

Ray Perkins, radio jester, was promoted this week from Captain to a Major in the M.I.R. of the U. S. Army. . . . Perkins, who in addition to his character of Prince of the Pineapple on the Libby Hour, and Old Topper on the Jergens Period, is also Major Ice-Quick on the Frigidaire broadcast, and now declares that instead of a character actor, he has become a type-actor. . . .

DEAR HERALD:

Somehow, when we see Paul Lukas and Eleanor Boardman in a picture we are impressed with the fact that they are not trying to act; they are just being natural, doing things and saying things in a natural way just as ordinary folks would do. They tell us that the best actors are those who do not try to act. "Be yourself" is a rule that should govern all actors, but too few there are who follow it. Following one's natural instinct is what makes for good acting. We believe it was Admiral Bob Evans who said, when he was warned not to go into the harbor because of the mines, "To hell with the mines; go ahead." Barbara Frietchie was following a natural instinct when she leaned out of the window and shouted, "Shoot if you must this old gray head, but spare your country's flag." Neither Bob nor Barbara was acting; they were just being natural, and that's why Paul Lukas and Eleanor Boardman were so impressive in "Women Love Once."

This picture will likely not draw more than two stars from the reviewers, but we will give it all there are in the case because of the reasonableness of the story, its sensible dialogue, the absence of suggestive situations, its appeal to one's sense of justice, the excellence of its direction and the exceptional acting of these two delightful performers. Paramount has no call to apologize for this one.

Had the director of "The Smiling Lieutenant" not gone to the extreme he did in bringing out unnecessary suggestions in the bedroom scenes, that picture would have been much more acceptable. That's why we emphasize the cleanliness of "Women Love Once." Suggestive scenes and smutty dialogue are the bane of the industry, and it's time we got away from it, but our long experience in the business and the tendency of the producers do not strengthen hope within us that we ever will.

We have been wrong so many times that if we ever happen to be right, and some one will mention the fact, we will have our life-size picture appear in this magazine, provided George will give it space.

A Contrary People

We Americans do things contrary to any other nation on earth. We send men to congress to make laws and then there is a mad scramble to see who can break the most of them. We shout ourselves hoarse for universal peace and then Uncle Sam puts on a long tail coat and marches down the avenue to see who dares to step on the tail of it.

When some country tries to abridge the right of our millionaires to take oil out of their country every mother's son of us rushes for the closet to get our shotguns. We pride ourselves on being sportsmen, we donate 10 cents to the Red Cross and pay 25 dollars for a ringside seat to see a couple of bull-necks maul each other for 30 minutes. We tune in on the president's speech and immediately tune out to get a jazz orchestra. We pass laws prohibiting the manufacture of spirituous liquors and lend the grape growers millions of dollars to make grape concentrates with an alcohol content that will blow the lid off, and we legalize the sale of it.

We collect income tax derived from an illegal business and we wink at the illegal business. We used to be told to "vote as you shoot" but Chicago shoots as she votes. Boston lives on codfish balls and baked beans, Vermont on basswood hams and Connecticut on wooden nutmegs. Texas wants Oklahoma to move over and give her more room. Hollywood wants to buy Plymouth Rock to use in one of her sets and Reno gets 'em comin' and goin'.

It won't be long now until we will be in the midst of another presidential campaign. The Republican platform will read, "We point with pride to the unprecedented prosperity," etc., etc., and the Democratic platform will read, "We view with alarm the gross inefficiency," etc., etc., and we will be expected to take our choice with the certainty that we will get soaked no matter what we do. We're in a helluva fix, and if we hadn't been born in Michigan we might have been a Dutchman, and then just see what the Dutch would have to answer for. All in favor of the motion say no. The nose (cahcoo) has it and they call it hay fever.

On Graveyards

We can't understand why Paramount would follow "Women Love Once" with a picture like "Murder By the Clock." This one starts in a graveyard and ends in a graveyard. It has everything in it that a picture shouldn't have, and if you can get ninety minutes of entertainment in a morgue, then this one ought to please you.

Ordinarily Lilyan Tashman is an excellent "heavy," but in this picture she puts in entirely too much avoirdupois, for she arranged for the murder of three without any perceptible reason for it. This one ought to be played in hot weather, for it will make the cold chills run all over you and you will think it is twenty degrees below zero.

Whoever conceived the idea for this picture should be awarded a medal for the world's greatest gloom builder. He must have been a sexton. If Hollywood makes a few more like this one Chicago will have to surrender her laurels, and that will be tough on Chicago.

If there is anyone in your community that you have it in for, send him a free ticket to see this picture and then credit yourself with having paid the debt in full, no matter what it is.

William Boyd and Lilyan Tashman are entirely too good performers to waste their time on such story material as "Murder By the Clock."

The New Guide

A fellow said to us the other day, "Say Colonel, you are old enough to have some sense and I'd like to ask you if the girl was right when she said that "that that that that that preacher spoke of was all wrong" and we replied, "Well, our opinion is that that that that that girl was talking about should be referred to the Committee of the Whole without recommendations." We felt like the new guide did when he was conducting some tourists around Washington and they came to Washington's monument and one of the ladies in the party inquired, "Say, guide, what does that monument stand for?" And the guide scratched his head for a moment and then said, "Well lady, they thought it would look better standing up than lying down." Now, after that, you can take epsom salts if you like but we'd suggest Pluto Water.

We're off on that long trek toward the land of the setting sun, and we hope to find some spot where they have turned their eyes from the mournful past toward a hopeful future, yes sir we do, for . . .

Out on that long, long trail we'll be winding
Toward the land of the setting sun,
And we hope that we'll be finding
Where prosperity has begun.
We'll see the boys in old Wyoming
And then go on to Idaho,
And you can hear us sing in the gloaming
If we find smiles where'er we go.

NEARER AND NEARER

. . . comes the day when ultra-speed motion picture negative will eliminate slower emulsions. The latest impetus is supplied by the new gray backing on Eastman Super-sensitive. This advance is of particular interest to the exhibitor and the producer. Definitely improving photographic quality, it means more artistic, more pleasing, more satisfying pictures. And these factors, needless to say, have a very definite box-office value. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, New York. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

NEITHER WICKED NOR WEAK... JUST HUMAN!

Hearts break when a babe is taken from its mother!

They said she was wicked. She wasn't. That she was guilty. She wasn't. Then they said she shouldn't have her own child. Too great a punishment even for the guiltiest!

FALL BUYERS NUMBER

Looking toward a new season in motion picture entertainment — and a quickened pace in the world's business affairs — the 1931 Fall issue of this semi-annual number of BETTER THEATRES will select generously from a wealth of timely editorial material and again bring its standard theatre equipment directories up-to-date. For six months following it will be the reference book of the theatre supply field, thus the advertisement therein must repeat—and repeat its message. Make a note now to have a representative call.

IT MAY BE ONLY COINCIDENCE

—BUT the majority of the country's most successful theatres use Alexander Smith Crestwood Carpet

FOR EXAMPLE:
Paramount Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

What is it you want in a carpet?

—rich and brilliant colors? Compare CRESTWOOD colors with those of any other carpet manufactured by the same process . . . Note the richness of the dyes and the uniformity of the dyeing — the absence of streaks and muddiness.

—beautiful patterns? Compare CRESTWOOD patterns with those offered by other manufacturers. Note the beauty of CRESTWOOD designs . . . How clearly each color stands out . . . No "out-of-focus" blurring. Note that there is a pattern for almost any decorative scheme.

—quality? Compare the pure wool from which CRESTWOOD is woven, the depth of pile and density of weave — factors which assure years of satisfactory service.

Make these comparisons and you will see why CRESTWOOD is the ideal theatre carpet and why it is so extensively used by Fox, Warner Bros., Publix and the majority of the country's most successful theatres. Let us send you a CRESTWOOD sample and color cards showing the wide selection of beautiful new patterns now available. W. & J. Sloane, 577 Fifth Avenue, New York, sole selling agents.

OPEN AN unfinished THEATER?

WHAT an absurd idea. No sane minded show man would even think of opening a new theater until construction was finished. Yes, and it is equally absurd trying to draw crowds to your theater if the acoustics is poor. Remember, no matter how attractive the front, how luxurious the interior, or how costly the reproduction apparatus . . . your theater is still incomplete unless it is acoustically correct. As far as theatergoers are concerned, they are more interested in hearing and understanding your sound pictures than in the beauty of the theater itself.

The use of Insulite Acoustile is the simple and economical method of controlling excess sound energy and correcting acoustics. Insulite Acoustile eliminates reverberation, echoes, and "dead spots" most efficiently, because it has a more uniform sound absorbent co-efficient over the entire frequency range than any other material. That's why Insulite is used in sound stages and sets by R. K. O., Paramount-Lasky, Universal, and other large producers of sound pictures.

Costly remodeling and closing the house over an extended period is not necessary when you use Insulite Acoustile. The pleasingly textured, tile-like units of Acoustile can be applied in an unlimited number of patterns to the existing walls and ceiling. Moreover, Acoustile is attractive in its natural color, or may be decorated to blend with any color scheme.

May we send you additional information in regard to Insulite Acoustile and tell you how you may take advantage of the free acoustical service The Insulite Co. is offering to theater owners? Write today . . . no obligation.

USE THIS SERVICE » » » »

The Acoustical Research Department of The Insulite Co. will gladly help you solve your acoustical problems. Merely give us the details and we will submit a practical and economical method of securing the desired results. You are under no obligation for this service.

Why Do So Many Theatres Specify Mohawk Carpet?

Comfort for your patrons is something more than a matter of seating equipment, ventilation and lighting. It includes careful attention to a number of other details—one of which is the important problem of correct carpeting. When you specify Mohawk carpets for your theatre, you are assured of a lasting softness and resilience underfoot, which constitutes the final touch of luxurious comfort—an essential factor in successful theatre operation.

Quiet You've probably noticed that a large part of the avoidable noise in most theatres comes from the floors, aisles and stairways. The remedy, of course, is a quietizing Mohawk carpet that will deaden the sound of scuffing, tramping feet and help to absorb the other noises that disturb your patrons. Mohawk theatre carpets are constructed with this purpose always in mind—which is another reason for their increasing popularity among theatre executives.

Appearance Mohawk's wide assortment of figured and plain-toned carpets offers remarkable opportunities for the selection of designs and color schemes to harmonize with every type of decoration. Mohawk's Scotia grade is available in more than 20 figured patterns and a variety of plain colors especially suited for theatre use. Moreover, special designs may be made up with the utmost promptness and without cost to you.

Durability The terrific daily wear that theatre carpets must withstand under thousands of scuffing, tramping, grinding feet requires a carpet of unusual quality. Mohawk Scotia carpeting is especially constructed for theatre use and its durability under the most severe conditions has been proved in scores of prominent theatres. Before your next carpet installation, investigate the advantages of this special theatre fabric.

Sixteen Million to One . . .

MOTION picture projection today demands a source of light sixteen million times as brilliant as the screen.

Due to losses through aperture, shutter, film, optical system and screen absorption, only a small percentage of the light from the source is reflected from the screen. This is spread over a picture a half million times the area of the arc crater from which it comes. That is why the crater brilliancy must be sixteen million times the brilliancy of the screen.

National Projector Carbons hold their leadership in the motion picture theatre because they provide a source of steady, white light surpassing the sun in intrinsic brilliancy.

Over fifty years of experience, constant research and the most modern manufacturing facilities assure their uniformity. Yet they are paid for, at each performance, by two satisfied patrons.

Deluxe Seating... Acoustically Correct

THE chair shown above typifies the class, comfort, and box-office appeal of the new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Seating. From every angle the new H-W Chairs have that class, comfort, and style which lend prestige and build profits for any theatre, regardless of size.

Most of the new H-W Chairs have been designed for use in sound houses. Several of them were developed in cooperation with Publix engineers who have made exhaustive studies of acoustical requirements in theatre equipment. The chair shown above is particularly adapted to sound use. Its soft, luxurious, sound absorbing upholstery; its custom type of tailoring on the seat and back; and its refreshingly modern aisle standard make this seat one of the most beautiful and practical designs ever built.

Publix has installed more than a quarter million H-W Theatre Seats. Many other leading chains and independents have also specified H-W Seats because of their fine workmanship, smart design, unusual comfort, and long wear. If you are planning to seat a new house or reseat an old one, it will pay you to get all the facts on H-W Theatre Seating. A note to the nearest H-W Sales Office will bring complete information.

HEYWOOD-WAKEFIELD

¶ Lighting control grows apace, which—after such a long period of relative rest—is a sign that augurs well for the science and art of illumination as it may be applied to all aspects of the theatre. The method under discussion in this issue brings into play a new contribution to the amazing science of photoelectrics. Responding through the thermionic tube, developed at the Westinghouse laboratories, this system permits of a myriad of pre-arranged lighting effects, static or mobile, from a control board arranged somewhat like an organ console—and manipulated in much the same manner. Another tribute to modern science! But while admiring, we reflect upon the radio, noting how the use of its magical powers has not been as noble as the instrument itself. Perhaps we are in the habit, in this age, of worshipping the machine itself, rather than what it does for us. Genius has gone into the making of the radio. But how much genius has gone into that which the radio does for us? The means of lighting and its complex, subtle control is being rapidly developed. Its value will be proved only by the breadth and beauty of the employment we give it. . . . Not to forget, however, the author of Playing Light on a Thermionic Organ: W. C. Fulton is an engineer on the staff of the Westinghouse Company who was directly concerned in the famous Severance Memorial Hall installation, which here serves as a graphic means of describing the whole system.

¶ Inclined to take advantage of contrasts, which can make salient points the more outstanding, we pair the Fox theatre in Phoenix, Ariz., with the new Guild Hall in East Hampton, N. Y., to comment on two interesting phases of theatre designing. The Fox house (An Ultra-Modern Theatre ni the Old Southwest), unusual as it is in many respects, is yet the theatre as the average community knows it. Guild Hall (Designing the Community Center Type of Theatre) may be what many a community might find especially attractive. Quite probably for the average community, the more formal type of theatre is more appropriate. But somehow we like the idea of sociability suggested in a theatre like Guild Hall, and to some small cities—particularly suburban communities—this intimate, gathering-place sort of theatre has psychological attributes that make it especially promising of success.

¶ The analysis of the situation in theatre designing today made by Ben Schlanger (Architecture and the Engineer) points directly to a condition that has some very adverse effects upon the efficiency and long-run value of motion picture theatres. That is the building of theatres by persons having no direct interest in the welfare of the motion picture industry. What the building promoter wants principally is a thing of four walls, a roof and some seats, with the whole prettied up enough to invite a lease from a theatre operator, usually a circuit. To describe the process at its worst: The builder wants to put as little "dough" into the project as possible, and get all of it back as quickly as possible. He is scarcely one to be much interested in efforts such as BETTER THEATRES long has been making, and such as the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has now so admirably undertaken. Patently, continued betterment—and this does not refer to decoration—of the highly mechanized motion picture theatre must be sought through those who build theatres for their own operation, and through those who lease theatres from realty enterprises. As the matter concerns the former, there is no problem save that basic one of finding out and making well known the best way to arrange a motion picture theatre. With respect to the latter, however, success of scientific theatre planning rests upon the extent to which the motion picture interests who lease theatres will demand that the houses leased be designed according to the best technical principles. It may be that such demands will depend upon a fine balancing of economics with professional pride and integrity. But we don't at the moment think so. Indications are that the best planned theatre will cost no more than a slip-shod display of plaster gingerbread, and quite possibly even not so much. . . . It will be recalled that Mr. Schlanger, who is a New York architect, introduced a plan for reversing the slope of the main floor, at the convention of the S. M. P. E. in Los Angeles last May. It is interesting to note that Mr. Schlanger has again been invited to speak before the S. M. P. E. on the same subject, and that he will develop the plan more fully at the society's convention in Swampscott, Mass., next month.

¶ We think that Ken Wright, theatre organist in Rhinelander, Wis., who gives his point of view in It's Largely Up to the Organist, is at least partly right. But we think he overlooks a strong point in favor of his profession when he doesn't adduce more forcefully the well known words of wisdom, that variety is the spice of life. What the short subjects add to the lengthy expounding of the question, "What Shall We Do With Our Wives?" with double channel amplification, the organ novelty can contribute also—and sometimes the organist's ability to cut up a bit musically in a way that permits us all to join in and be a part of the show, has distinct advantages. Besides the organ is a mighty beautiful instrument. The important thing is to have the organist capable and clever—yes, Wright is right. It's largely up to the organist, after all!

¶ Leo T. Parker (Leases: Decisions of the Higher Courts) contributes regularly to BETTER THEATRES on matters of law as they pertain to the theatre. He is a Cincinnati attorney and contributor to many publications on legal affairs.

BEGINNING A NEW SEASON

an editorial

LOOKING forward is at least one of America's virtues. At a time when the European feels like getting desperate, the Yank (so the European has enviously noted) can pull a smile and a wisecrack—and hope for the best on tomorrow.

But things are really not that bad—in show business. The remarkable thing is that, in distinction to previous periods of economic "blues," motion picture theatre-going has backed water as much as it has. Maybe there is a moral in that. At any rate, show business should be sure that its own house is in order, rather than that of the world in general, and now, at the beginning of a brand new season, is doubtless the time to seek such certainty.

Are we making entertainment buying a good bargain? That's a basic principle of salesmanship. Hence the reluctance of showmen to give up the double feature. But that has not really proved a good bargain, in the long run, for either the individual showman or the industry, and the regular theatre-going season must see an adjustment here. How, then, to build a program that is economically sound for the industry, yet a good bargain for the public?

Another point involves making motion picture theatre-going a habit. It still is, but obviously not nearly so strong a habit as once it was. Showmen have recognized this and have wondered if the screen had lost it flavor, in comparison with new diversions. With the screen more resourceful and expert than ever? No, unquestionably the answer lies elsewhere. And if one reflects on how the motion picture theatre thrived on a dime and began to have serious problems of attendance on a dollar, one wonders about admission prices. Habit? Many a man prefers perfectos. But his income dictates one of them on Sunday, and Bull Durham the rest of the week.

Looking ahead into the new season of 1931-32 is not only pleasanter than looking back, but mandatory. But it should not consist in mere wonder. The way ahead needs mapping.

PLAYING LIGHT ON A THERMIONIC ORGAN

a detailed description of the Severance Hall installation

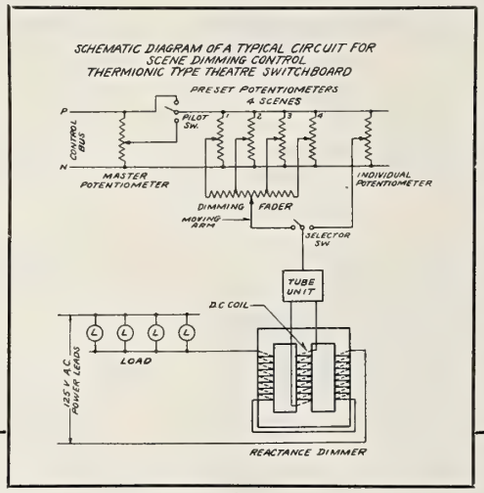
By W.C. FULTON

ALTHOUGH the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra has been assembled for 15 years, it never had a home of its own until the opening of the new Severance Memorial Hall. One of the novel features of the main auditorium is a unique lighting switchboard, which was built and installed by the Westinghouse Company. This article is intended to describe only the thermionic type of lighting control now in operation.

The major innovation of the lighting equipment is the switchboard, built on the lines of a modern organ, with finger tip control and virtually frictionless. The compactness of equipment is such that all controls for approximately 4,000 lighting combinations are centered in the console within easy reach of the operator's finger tips. Although there are only 36 control circuits on the console, with 110 load circuits to be dimmed, the amazing number of lighting combinations available are made possible by an elaborate cross connecting system. This system will be explained later.

The scheme of illumination adopted for both stage and auditorium is the new system of thermionic control for lighting, incorporating preset, proportional, remote control of intensity, and interconnection of circuits. This system is capable of accomplishing the presetting of dimming for four scenes in advance, with gradual fade from scene to scene at controlled rate. The feature or proportional dimming, whereby two or more circuits at different settings of intensity keep their relative brilliance while being dimmed by master control, is also included.

The control apparatus required for each circuit consists essentially of a dimming reactor, a conventional radio vacuum tube, two grid glow tube rectifiers, and a system of control potentiometers. To make the operation of the circuit clear we will first give a simple explanation of a typical circuit leaving out all detail and intricate apparatus.



REFERRING TO FIG. 1, the lamp load current flowing in the a. c. coils of the reactor, which are connected in series, is directly dependent on the d. c. saturation current flowing in the d. c. coil of the same unit. As the direct current increases, the iron core becomes saturated, and the load current increases correspondingly. The direct current is supplied by the pair of grid glow tubes, whose output is regulated by the plate current from the vacuum tube.

In turn, the electrical conductivity of the vacuum tube is controlled by a variation of the bias on its grid. The apparatus previously mentioned, consisting of the reactor and tube unit, is mounted on the reactor rack in the apparatus room (usually located in the basement). The control wire to the grid of the vacuum tube is traced back to the selector switch on the pilot board, which selects either the preset or the individual control. If preset control is selected, the preset scene connected to the tube unit will depend on the setting of the moving arm of the dimming fader. All preset potentiometers and the individual potentiometer are in turn connected to a pilot switch, which either connects them to direct feed or through the master potentiometer.

The master potentiometer is energized directly from the control bus. Any number of similar circuits may be connected and controlled by the master potentiometer, by throwing their corresponding pilot switches.

As already stated, all controls are mounted on the movable console, which is located on the stage (or may ride the orchestra lift), while the reactors and tube units are assembled on the reactor rack in the basement. Close to the rack is a motor generator set and its control panel. This motor generator set is used to supply the necessary power to the control equipment. The main d. c. control source, which is normally 42 volts, is supplied by the main generator. This generator feeds power to all individual, group-master, and sub-group master potentiometers, in addition to all constant voltage buses. Driven by the same motor is the grand-master generator that feeds the variable voltage grand-master bus. Field control of this generator by a grand-master potentiometer on the console, in series with a rheostat on the motor generator set panel, accomplishes the required results of master dimming. And lastly, on the same shaft, is mounted a 180 volt d. c. generator, which feeds direct current to the vacuum tubes. A power source of 115 volts, 60 cycles is also required, and this is taken from the main feed to the lamp loads.

THE THERMIONIC type of control falls into three major divisions: (a) Control console, (b) relay cross connecting panels, and (c) reactors and tube units. Each will be treated separately.

Control Console

As previously mentioned, the console provides flexible control of 110 lighting circuits by 36 dimming controls, and by four additional controls that do not pass through the cross connecting network. These latter are permanently connected to the down-lights in the auditorium. All equipment mounted on the console can be grouped into the following divisions:

(A) Cross connecting switches enabling the switching of any one, or up to 10, of the 110 load circuits, to anyone of the 36 individual controls. These switches are located on the diagonal sides of the board in the vertical faces, 55 on either side.

(B) Thirty-six individual control drums, which remotely control the dimming of whatever load circuits are connected to them by the switching under (a).

(C) One four-scene preset dimming device associated with each individual control, but with individual scene faders mounted and operated by a common gang shaft by motor or handwheel. Equipment under (b) and (c) is located on center keyboard of console.

(D) Four group master potentiometers, foot, handwheel or motor operated, each capable of electrically controlling any combination of the 36 individual controls that it may be desired to connect to them.

(E) Nine sub-group master potentiometers, foot-pedal-operated, each capable of electrically controlling any or all of the corresponding sub-group of four controls.

(F) Four individual control drums located on the left inclined panel, and one master for dimming the house direct circuits. The master potentiometer may be foot-, handwheel- or motor-operated.

(G) One grand-master potentiometer, foot-, handwheel- or motor-operated, capable of electrically controlling any or all individual controls or group controls.

(H) Remote individual control for 20 four-color boomerangs on spotlights. These controls are located on the right vertical panel.

(I) Remote individual "Joy Stick" control for directional and focusing of nine spotlights.

(J) Signals and remote iris diaphragm control to nine arc spot positions. Control equipment under (i) and (j) is mounted on inclined side panels.

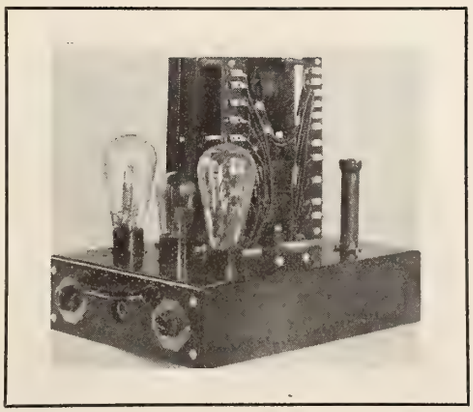
On the keyboard section of the console are located the 36 individual controls spaced 15 sixteenths of an inch on centers. Each control has the following associated apparatus starting with the lower key row and going up. First, a two-position tilting tab switch that transfers the control from the hand operated individual potentiometer to the associated foot-pedal-operated sub-group master potentiometer. Second, an individual control drum for direct control of lamp intensity, which is set at zero scale for black-out, and at 10 for full-bright. Third, a pilot lamp to indicate when the control is energized. Fourth, a strip of interlocking keys that connect the control to anyone of the six control buses; namely, individual, grand-master, and the four group-masters. Fifth, a two-position tilting tap switch for selecting either preset of manual. Sixth, a group of four-scene present potentiometers that are set at zero scale for blackout, and at 10 for full-bright. Seventh, a cross connecting selector button for connecting or disconnecting the predetermined loads and the control circuit. Eighth, a cross connecting pilot lamp button. And ninth, a two-position tilting tab switch for throwing the control "on" or "off."

ON A FOUR-INCH-WIDE panel running from top to bottom through the center of the keyboard, is mounted all master controls. At the top is a clock, while just below is the preset indicator. The scene flasher keys and pilot lamps follow. Below these are the motor switch and rheostat, while on the same section the grand master and preset fader magnetic clutch switches are located. The reduced speed clutch switch is next with the four group master interlocks from handwheel to motor control and the four master selector switches just below. On the bottom section are the "black-out" and "master" keys.

Voltmeters are located on either side of the cue sheet holder just above the keyboard. These voltmeters give the operator continuous indication of the main d. c. generator voltage and of the grand-master generator voltage. On the vertical panel, immediately in front of the operator, are six slow-motion handwheels for master control, and one wheel for the scene fader assembly.

To obtain a clear understanding of how the switchboard is set up, we will go through the sequence of operation from starting the motor generator set to shutting it down. First, we will assume for the time being that the predetermined load circuits have been connected to the appropriate controls. By closing the "master" switch on the console, the line feeding the motor of the motor generator set is closed, and at the same time contactors on the reactor rack, which supply 115 volts 60 cycles to the tube units, close in. After a time delay of sufficient length to allow the filaments to become heated, a second set of contactors close in, energizing the anodes or main circuits of the tubes. When the motor generator set comes up to speed, the voltages of the generators are set at their proper values by rheostats on the motor generator set panel. Power is now supplied to the tube units and to the console as far as the black-out contactor. By closing the black-out switch, the main generator and the grand master generator leads are now connected to their associated control buses.



A rectifying tube with the cover removed. The unit is located in the basement.

Now let us assume that control No. 1 is to be operated individually. Since the negative side of all potentiometers are tied together, we are only concerned from what bus or source the positive side is fed. Working from the lower row of the keyboard up, the tilting tab transfer switch remains in its normal position, since it is not desired to control by sub-group master. The next row containing the individual potentiometer may be set for any intensity desired when the lights come on. Just above is the strip of interlocking keys, and the key marked "IND" should be closed, which connects the positive side of the individual and preset potentiometers to direct feed. The tilting tab selector switch will now be closed to the "manual" position, which connects the moving arm of the in-

AN ULTRA-MODERN THEATRE IN THE OLD SOUTHWEST

Describing the new Fox theatre in Phoenix, Ariz., another demonstration of S. Charles Lee's method of interpreting the spirit of the theatre in modernistic forms of abstract themes

THE NEWEST of recent Fox theatres designed by S. Charles Lee, architect of Los Angeles, is also one of the boldest in carrying out his use of the modernistic manner, not to realize beauty in severity, but to give the spirit of fantasy —of the make-believe world of the theatre —full play, departing, however, from the realistic interpretations that the atmospheric vogue had got us to expect, employing instead colorful, complex abstractions.

With a great amount of these elements composed into a spacious whole, executed by Robert E. Power, the Fox theatre in Phoenix, Ariz., has a striking brilliance about it, and the more practical facilities are modern, too, in their completeness. The theatre seats about 2,000 on two levels. It represents a financial outlay of about $360,000.

One enters double doors to the lobby. Here is specially woven carpet. The grand staircase is to the right, glistening of silver. It leads to the mezzanine floor. Huge modernistic pillars support the staircase and reach to the circular ceiling, 44 feet in diameter, which is also of modernistic, highly decorative design.

Upper view: Front exterior, showing the entrance—the facade building up into the sign itself, and the latter placed against the masses of theatre proper in the rear.

Lower view: Detail of the vestibule, showing box office, the lower part of marble, the upper portion emphasizing the decorative theme of the vestibule.

Upper view: The lobby looking across to passage to the auditorium and beneath the staircase to the mezzanine. The tapestry is one of two depicting a Burmese nude.

Lower view: Detail of a stained glass window in the foyer, the decorative effect of which is almost exclusively derived from architectural elements rather than furnishings.

Draperies are hung at walls, which were glazed after being sprayed with liquid aluminum. To the left is the promenade, also highly decorated in modernistic design.

The grand staircase is of rare design. White metal handrails set off upright rods 15 feet long, topped by one-inch thick, decorative glass. At tip and base of each rod are spun silver balls seven inches in diameter. The color scheme is gray, red and blue, and these colors have been blended in practically every section of the building. There are but two pieces of furniture in the lobby, both are long, heavily upholdstered divans. Two tapestries, on each of which has been painted the nude figure of a Burmese woman, hang from the wall. The figures are done in bronze and offer a complementing contrast to a sparkling background of green and silver bordered with black.

A 100-foot winding promenade serves as a downstairs lounge. It is well furnished with heavily upholstered davenports and easy chairs. A half dozen paintings have been hung along either side of the corridor. There is enough vivid color in them to offer a change from the soft colors found in the furniture and rugs and from the somber lights along the wall. An interesting feature in the promenade is a large drinking fountain done in black. The modernistic design follows the general artistic decoration of the theatre. Directly across the promenade from the fountain is a large mirror which reflects an ornamental basin. At the end of the promenade are two white doors which lead into the manager's office suite, done in green and red soft tones.

Large doors lead from the promenade into the auditorium. The highspot here is the lighting effects. Large chandeliers hang from six points of the ceiling. Four of them extend over the main floor, and two hang from the ceiling directly above the front section of the balcony. From each of these six fixtures may be produced three lighting effects. Colors used in them are green, blue and orange. Along the walls of the auditorium is a series of lamps which also produce colorful effects.

The organ grilles on each side of the proscenium arch are constructed of plaster, covered with silver leaf and highlighted with goldleaf. Rhinestone curtains, iridescent and illuminated, back these grilles, and each note of the organ causes these curtains to move, the result being a very different and pleasing effect.

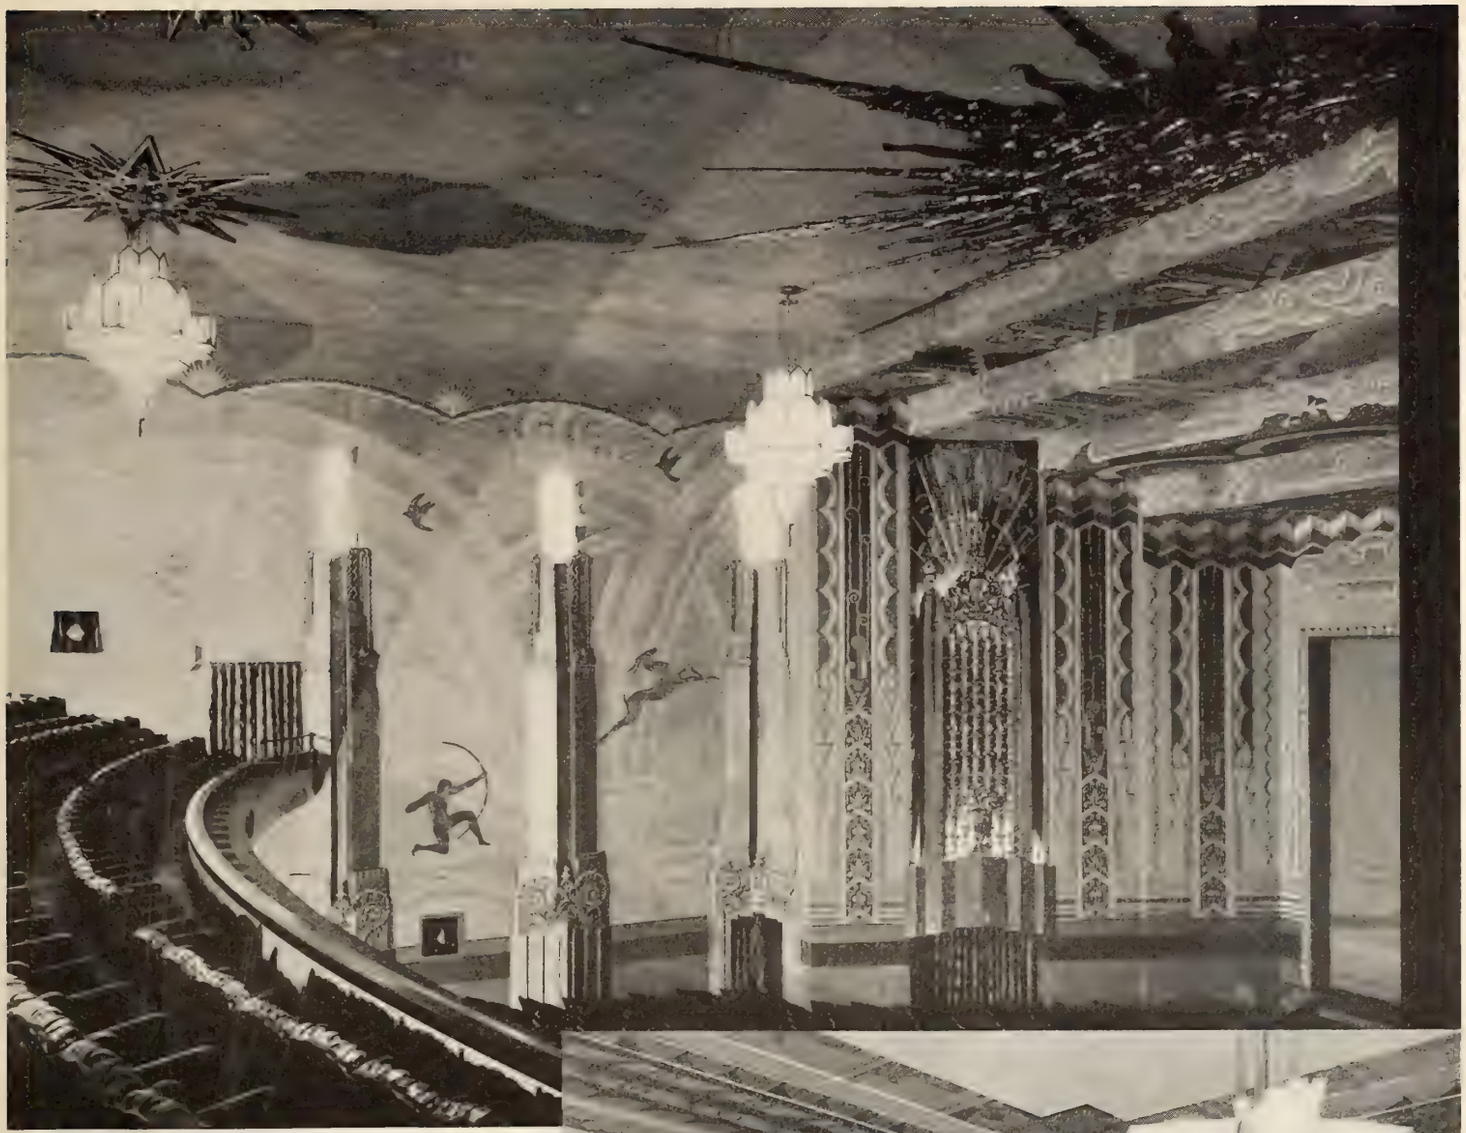
Bas-relief figures finished in silver and gold leaf cause the sidewalks of the auditorium to stand out in clear and graceful lines. There are an archer, a stag and a deer. Walls are modernistically decorated and illuminated.

The full width stage has been constructed, with a depth of 28 feet and a height of 25 feet. The auditorium, at its widest point, is 90 feet wide.

Four inches more than is customary have been allowed between the back and front of each seat to give more room between seats.

The ceiling of the auditorium is "stepped" upward from the proscenium arch in the interests of sound reception.



Above: The auditorium toward left wall, affording a glimpse of proscenium area. The auditorium has a maximum width of 90 feet, while the stage has a depth of 28 feet, and a height of 25 feet.

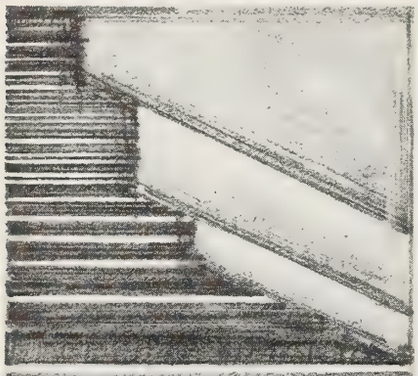
Right: The general lounge, on the mezzanine levvel. This spacious chamber, furnished like a drawing room, has entrances to separate lounges for men and women — the latters' a three-room suite.

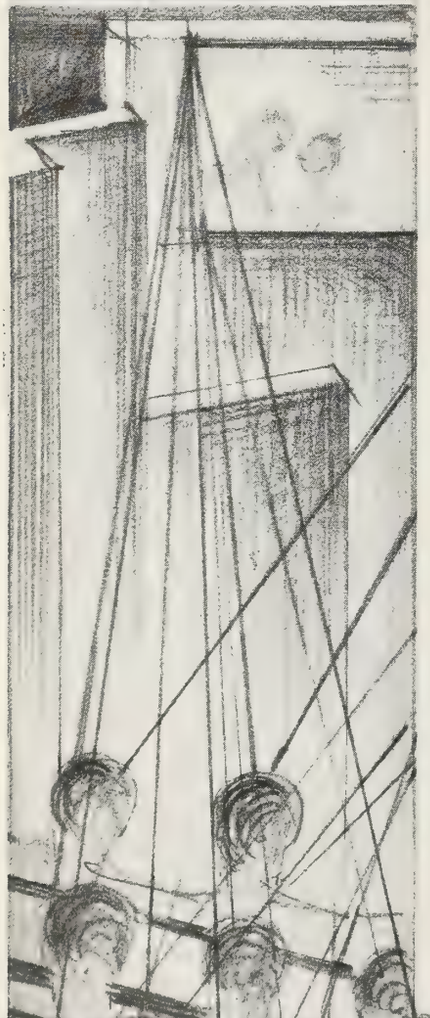
Proper air conditioning, always an important adjunct to the facilities of any theatre, no matter what the climate, has special significance with respect to cooling, in a region like Arizona. Here the atmospheric conditions are influenced by the arid desert, and it frequently, through a large part of the year, is not conducive to theatre attendance. The Fox Phoenix system provides for refrigeration by the carbon dioxide method, cooling at the same time that it dehumidifies.

Projection room equipment, of course, is complete with stage effect apparatus as well as a comprehensive film projection and sound layout. Sound equipment is Western Electric.

ARCHITECTURE AND THE ENGINEER

what their co-ordination means in theatre planning





By BEN SCHLANGER

THE MODERN motion picture theatre building is an extremely complicated and highly specialized type of structure—so much so, indeed, that it requires the professional services of more than one individual to bring it into a useful existence. It is one task to select these individuals, and still another one to co-ordinate their work. Since this article is addressed to the theatre owner, who may or may not be the operator, it is necessary to give some thought as to who really builds theatres.

Unfortunately, the builder in many instances is not directly connected with the motion picture industry. He is just a landlord who leases the ground and structure on it to an independent or circuit theatre operator. In other words, this person is either a speculating builder, else he is in the real estate business. He naturally tries to keep the cost of the building down to a minimum, even to the extent of jeopardizing the efficiency of the building —a very unwise saving when one considers that the success of the theatre is a definite security for his investment, and vice versa.

Sometimes the theatre operators venture to erect a structure for their own use, which usually results in a better job. But this does not happen often enough, because theatres in most cases today occupy only a portion of a building that has considerable other income-producing areas, and therefore the theatre operator chooses to keep out of the real estate business. These conditions are difficult to adjust, but if we are to expect better theatres in the near future, one or two things must happen: The theatre operator must demand of the landlord certain conditions, or the landlord must himself be educated properly for his own good.

In either case, the important thing is a correct start, and that is to select the best professional services for designing the theatre structure. It would be well to add that to seek these services on a competitive price basis is a great mistake that only results in paying doubly later, both in the process of construction and in the loss of potential income from the structure.

Before the theatre builder attempts to select any professional services, he must in his own mind have a clear conception of the needs of a modern motion picture theatre. This term is really dangerous to use, because of the various interpretations given to it, and therefore it needs some analyzing.

The first step to take, would be to clearly differentiate between the terms modern and modernistic. The modernistic theatre differs from any other theatre only in respect to the style of ornamentation applied, with the mechanics of the theatre added as an afterthought, or almost in some instances as a necessary evil. The modern theatre is one that is really and truly, in its entirety, a machine in itself working with the necessary precision required, leaving the æsthetic and decorative effects to be found in the very lines of the machine.

The modernistic theatre presents no changes from the theatre of 25 years ago, in spite of the fact that new functions have been forced into it. The really modern theatre can only come from a blending of the architectural and engineering elements of the structure. Good architecture in the true sense can best be defined as the organization, proportioning and rhythm of the many parts involved, regardless of the character of the individual parts. Surplus ornamentation is more commonly known as architecture, whereas it is really only a sugar-coating applied—and commonly applied to cover basic faults.

IT IS UP to the architect to plan the theatre structure to meet all the requirements of the law, to provide for the structural security of the building, and to supervise the actual construction. To date these have been his chief responsibilities. He cannot claim any unusual responsibility for the general planning and sight-line disposition of the theatre structure, because he is merely imitating his predecessors along these lines. He has kept away from anything that has the earmarks of being scientific or mechanical, as being irrelevant to his work.

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers recently testified to this wide gulf between architectural and engineering phases of the theatre structure, since it has begun an attempt to bring about a closer relationship. Reports of this society show that it has found the theatres built to date to be poorly planned from a standpoint of projection, acoustics, illumination and optics—and that's everything. These considerations are not as technical as some may think. They are the very architecture of the theatre more than anything else. The average theatre of today has no architecture of its own—it is almost a museum holding poor imitations of good old classical forms, and these, alas, are hardly ever seen because of the lack of light!

Now the problem remains as to how the different functions of the theatre structure are to be coordinated into a unit of mechanical efficiency, offering the comforts and emotional effects that the theatre patron is sure to appreciate.

The architect is best fitted for this job because his training and experience teaches him to compose the many parts into a workable whole, whereas the engineer, important as he may be, has his mind always focused on details. Then again it must be remembered that there are several engineers needed for one job, while in most cases only one architect is needed.

The architect must equip himself with a fairly good knowledge of the work of the various engineers, and the engineers should also have an idea of the essential architectural problem. The practice has been in the past for the architect and engineer to develop their respective parts of the work without any close relationship. One always seemed to be in the way of the other in their accomplishments. This might easily account for much of the faults of theatre design. The correct process of design would be for the architect to gather together all the engineering data with the help of appointed engineers, then to proceed to work his preliminary scheme around such information, instead of designing the building and then calling in the engineer to find some place for his work, somehow or other, without destroying the architectural scheme.

To this end, the theatre builder must realize that the architect must be supplied with certain assistance from various engineers, starting with the preliminary plans of a project, and that the architect is not in a position to pay for such services from the fee he receives. To obtain these services gratis from the various material and equipment companies is a great mistake, because such engineers must always make recommendations that for obvious reasons are not necessarily for the general good of the job.

More thought must now be given to such engineering services, as electrical, air conditioning, acoustical, projection and seating. The last mentioned should be handled by the architect in a much more scientific manner than it has been to date. The idea of buying seats as one would just so much furniture, after the theatre is completed, is one of the outstanding sore spots of present day theatres, when one considers what an integral part of a theatre the seating happens to be—in comfort, in acoustics, but especially in the visual effect of the picture.

The author . . . New York architect who recently brought forth the reversed floor incline for theatres.

SOME THEATRE builders may think that to pay certain engineers' fees, plus an architect's fee, might bring the cost of professional services too high. That is only because these costs are immediate costs that do not show their value until the finish of a project, and in some cases, later. When one realizes that the average life of a theatre building should be at least 15 years, one realizes the importance of the proper planning, mechanically as well as architecturally, so as to deter the approach of that time when the theatre may be regarded as obsolete.

Probably the near future will bring a more practical solution as to how best to obtain the needed professional services. Several possible schemes present themselves, yet each one may be subject to the peculiar aspects of a particular job. The small theatre in the small town presents a different problem from that of the deluxe house in the cities. Certain standardizations in design should help a great deal, much help toward which may presently be forthcoming from the new interests of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. Following are three plans that may prove successful as a means of providing professional services:

1. The employment of an architect and consulting engineers.
2. The employment of an architect so highly equipped in every phase of theatre design as to include all engineering services within his architectural service.
3. The use of a bureau of theatre planning consisting of architects, engineers, etc., to work in conjunction with a local architect.

The first plan might prove somewhat more costly than the second or third, and might also always be subject to friction due to the numbers of interested parties. This plan is probably not suited to the small town theatre, where cost is a very important item, but on the other hand it should be adaptable for the planning of many types of large theatre projects.

The second plan is a highly desirable one in most instances. Although some architects may claim to have such an organization, there is yet to be seen the results forthcoming from such a service. Unless such an architect had considerable work at all times, could he afford to maintain such a staff with the fee that is given architects for services? This plan may materialize if the theatre builder becomes educated to pay a sufficiently high fee for such service.

The third plan is an interesting one and seems to be particularly adaptable to the small theatre job, in which standardization is an important factor. Such a bureau could be responsible for the planning, and a local architect could carry out such plans with great ease and at a small cost to the builder, partly because of the long-run savings due to expert planning.

When one considers all the money that is now spent on unnecessary ornamental plaster, draperies, costly decorative painting and waseful structural portions that only hasten the obsolescence of the theatre, one wonders why it is such a difficult task to convince the theatre builder of the importance of highly expert professional service. This is no time to try to place blame on anyone, but it is time that all concerned in theatre building started to give full consideration to the complex demands of the truly modern motion picture theatre and what they require in precise, coordinated knowledge from many technical branches.

DESIGNING THE COMMUNITY CENTER TYPE OF THEATRE

To those interested in catering to the small but culturally appreciative class of town, Guild Hall in East Hampton, N. Y., offers many a suggestion

IN THE rather aristocratic country-side town of East Hampton, Long Island, about 100 miles from New York City, is a newly completed community theatre, called Guild Hall, that in architecture and atmosphere might well serve as a pattern for a cinema in many a small, compact community the country over. Guild Hall, which was opened but a few weeks ago, is thus far equipped for only stage theatricals and concerts, but of course it is entirely adaptable to motion pictures, and doubtless it will be so adapted.

The very character of Guild Hall, both as a building and as an institution, is gained upon one's first approach. A low, white, rambling structure, it sets with quiet charm in a spacious yard expertly landscaped with shrubbery, trees and gardens. A high picket fence stretches along the front and sides of the plot, and inside, one finds rustic stone benches to rest the stroller among the flowers there.

The building inside and out, is Colonial —with certain theatrical modifications. Aymar Embury was the architect, while the decorations, draperies and stage equipment are by the Novelty Scenic Studios. The technique employed by designer and decorator was apparently to create an entertainment and social center precisely attuned to the character of the locality to be served. East Hampton is "one of the Hamptons" of New York's suburban country-side, and particularly in summer, it is the residence of those who can afford, as well as appreciate, the finer things.

From the front the building appears as two wings flanking the facade, while from just beyond the central entrance, looms a shallow dome that surmounts the theatre proper—that is to say, the auditorium.

Entering, one is in a lobby of Colonial atmosphere, paneled and columned in the early American adaptation, in wood, of the Classical. Fluted columns flank the box office. Overhead are electrical "candelabra." On either side are other chambers, home-like and spacious, which, in a sense, are lounges—specifically, community gathering places in which are exhibited fine examples of the painter's and etcher's art. Yet a third room contains Early American furniture, authentic pieces from the past as lived in the very community that Guild Hall today would serve.

THE AUDITORIUM located just off the lobby in direct line with the entrance, is, in the main, faithfully Colonial.

The general decorative treatment and arrangement, notably the location of a series of square boxes across the rear, are redolent of the theatre as it endured through the first 50 years of this nation's existence.

Superimposed upon this atmosphere, which invites the imagination to people it with pink ladies and powdered gentlemen from the landowning gentry, is a tone borrowed from the modern circus. The ceiling is a veritable "big top," a tent-like fabric suspended from a central point at the ceiling and reaching to the walls, where it is, also tent-like, scalloped. The fabric, moreover, is vividly striped in silver, blue, green and red, and the walls themselves are similarly, though less brilliantly, treated. This color scheme is carried, in a measure, to the chairs, which have a red tone blending with the reds of the "tenting." Although the critic may question the judiciousness of resorting to the circus, the obvious intention has been to introduce a definite theatricalism, a kind of fantastic gayety, into the sober if exquisite formality of the Colonial character.

The auditorium seats a total of 350 persons. Of these seats, some 75 are located in a small balcony reached by a short flight of wooden stairs. The floor of the main level is of tile, while that of the balcony is of concrete. One notes in the auditorium, which almost invariably has not immediate access to the exterior, a window, placed in one of the side walls and in pattern and hangings, similar to those in front of the building. Opposite it, in the other wall, is a French window leading to a balcony overlooking a garden, and from this balcony one may descend to the garden by means of a short stairway.

A striking and unusual circular lighting fixture is suspended from the main ceiling. From a series of hoops made of metal, a cluster of large round globes are hung, one series below another, and built up to an impressive size. These globes are lighted in three colors and give the effect of vari-colored balloons. The metal framing of the fixture is done in a modified red, and is draped in bright red and silver corded rope and tassels.

The draperies are mainly done in blue and silver. In the octagonally shaped auditorium there is an arched window on each angular section, and these have silver curtains heavily draped, over which are hung blue velour draperies in generous folds fastened underneath a gilded crown, which appears at the top of every window.

Added charm and gracefulness, as well as originality, is achieved by the architect in his treatment of the proscenium elevation. This is the fourth wall of the auditorium, and he chose to do it with fabric as his prime medium. Hence a little below the ceiling a long rod was fastened to the wall with gilded rams heads affixed to the ends. From here richly draped blue festooned curtains are suspended in different formations down to the stage floor. The central portion has a gorgeous bright silver plush curtain extended to a position of over 20 feet from the floor. The point at which this drapery terminates, and the side draperies of the blue velour, form the outline of the procenium opening. Special lighting is concealed behind these draperies for the purpose of illumination as well as accomplishing effects when desired. The main curtain is done in silver and blue alternating widths of material, which fits in splendidly with the color scheme, and also gives a feeling of additional height. On the stage, the equipment is modern, ample rigging, counterweight sets and adequate lighting apparatus having been provided. The dressing rooms are provided with all the conveniences.

ONE OF the main features of interest consists in the two large galleries. These are spacious and airy and permit of displays and exhibitions of a varied character. The art galleries are named in honor of Thomas Moran, who did much to upbuild the cultural life of East Hampton back in the early '90's. A large green-room attached to the theatre is also available for the display of pictures and works of art. It is proposed to build up a permanent art collection in Guild Hall, and already a beginning has been made.

It is interesting to note the gold-lettered tablet at the entrance to the building on which is inscribed:

"To cultivate and encourage a taste for the arts through the presentation of drama and music, to provide galleries for the display of objects of artistic and historic interest, to provide a meeting place for committees and organizations of this village, to promote and encourage a finer type of citizenship."

Guild Hall is thus somewhat of a pattern for civic auditoriums, theatres and schools, particularly where the educational and cultural interests of a community are continually seeking a higher level, and wherein art and dramatic endeavor is striving to attain a higher degree of excellence. The mood and temper of the building, its grounds and its interior, are ideally conceived and constituted to stimulate and encourage the accomplishment of this purpose.

In its communal spirit, East Hampton is, of course, not really different from most small places, and particularly in the suburb, is a theatre like Guild Hall appealing.

Upper view: General view of the exterior of Guild Hall, as seen from the street, set in spacious grounds beautified with shrub, tree and garden.

LEASES: DECISIONS OF THE HIGHER COURTS

reviewing recent cases affecting theatres

By LEO T. PARKER

IT IS WELL settled that a firm or person who retains possession of leased property one day or more after the lease expires, is liable for payment of rental for a term equal to the term of the original lease. Moreover, where a lease stipulates that a written notice to vacate is required, a verbal notice will not relieve the tenant from liability for payment of rent for the second term.

For instance, in Gold V Fox Film Corporation, (155 Atl. 287), it was shown that the Fox Film Corporation leased a theatre building for a term of six years at stipulated rent which, for the last year of the term and any extension thereof, was $7,200 per annum, in monthly payments. The lease contract contained the following clause:

"Lessee agrees that if lessee (theatre operator) shall, at any time during the continuance of this lease, remove or attempt to remove lessee's goods or property out of or from said premises, without first having paid and satisfied lessor in full or for all rent which may become due during the entire term of this lease, then and in such case such removal or attempt to remove shall be considered as fraudulent, and the whole rent of this lease or any part thereof, at the option of lessor (landlord), shall be taken to be due and in arrear."

Without having given written notice of his intent to end the lease, the theatre operator on the last day of the six-year term, vacated the premises and removed his property therefrom. The landlord sued for the rent for the full year beginning the day after the theatre operator vacated the building. It was contended by the theatre operator that he was not liable because he had given the landlord verbal notice of his intentions to vacate. However, it is interesting to observe that the higher court held the theatre operator liable. and said:

"It may be a hard case, but notwithstanding the strenuous efforts for appellant (theatre operator), the record discloses no cause for reversal."

Sublease Contracts

VARIOUS COURTS have held that unless a lease contract distinctly specifies that a lessee may sublease the property, any contract of this nature is invalid and does not release the original lessee from liability for payment of the rent unless the property owner consents to such assignment.

Another important point of the law is that if a theatre owner executes a lease to a theatre operator, and the lease provides that the latter shall not convey the lease nor underlet the premises without the written consent of the lessor, and the lessor consents to an assignment of the lease, the assignee or sublessee cannot subsequently make a valid reassignment of the lease without the consent of the lessor.

For example, in the late case of Childs V Warner Brothers Southern Theatres (156 S. E. 923), it was shown that a theatre operator leased a theatre building under a lease contract which contained a clause, as follows:

"It is agreed that the said R. D. Craver (theatre operator) shall not convey this lease or underlet the premises without the written consent of the lessor."

A few years later the theatre operator assigned his lease to Warner Brothers Southern Theatres by written consent of the property owner. After the Warner company had operated the theatre for several months, it assigned its lease to another theatre operator known as the Carolina Theatres, Inc. This assignment of the lease was made without consent of the property owner. As soon as the property owner was informed that the Warner company had assigned the lease, he wrote the Warner company the following letter:

"If it is your desire to have the Carolina Theatres, Inc., remit the rent direct to me, that will be satisfactory, but I shall continue to recognize you as the lessee of the property now occupied by the Broadway Theatres and expect you to see that the payments are made promptly in accordance with the lease."

The Carolina Theatres, Inc., paid the rent to the property owner for a considerable period of time until it was unable to continue such payment. The property owner sued the Warner company for the rent during the remaining part of the lease term on the grounds that he had not given his written consent to the assignment of the lease by the Warner company to the Carolina Theatres, Inc., and also that he had sent the above mentioned notification to the Warner company.

The counsel for the Warner company contended that since the property owner had permitted the original tenant to assign the lease to the Warner company, the Warner company therefore was entitled to the same privilege and that the assignment made to the Carolina Theatres, Inc., was legal and valid, although it was made without consent of the property owner.

Notwithstanding these arguments the higher court rendered its decision holding that consent of a property owner to permit an original tenant to assign a lease does not give the subtenant the right to reassign the lease without another consent on the part of the property owner. This court said:

"It is deemed sufficient to say that a reasonable construction of the lease involved in this case leads to the conclusion that the restriction against assignment and subletting operated upon the heirs and assigns of the lessee as well as upon the lessee himself. The covenant to pay rent is continuous in its nature, and such covenant is binding by express provision upon the assigns of the lessee, and all persons occupying the premises upon the assignment from the lessee were charged with notice of the condition imposed by the writing under which they held title to the premises. Therefore, we hold that, by consenting to one assignment, the lessor did not waive the conditions of the lease and did not consent that thereafter any subsequent assignee could turn his property over to the use and occupancy of any undesirable or irresponsible person without his approval."

Leases and Injuries

ORDINARILY a property owner is relieved from liability for injuries to a tenant, or patron of the tenant, if the lease contract requires the tenant to maintain the property in good repair. However, it is important to know that this rule is not applicable where several tenants occupy the same building. So held a higher court in Bruder V Philadelphia (153 Atl. 725).

The facts of this case are that a property owner leased a room under a lease contract that contained a clause by which the tenant agreed to be responsible for the condition of the pavement, and "that the lessee is solely liable for any accidents alleged to be due to defective condition."

A pedestrian was injured when he stepped into a hole in a defective sidewalk. The injured person filed suit against the city, the tenant and the property owner for damages. The property owner contended that he was not liable because by the terms of the above mentioned clause the tenant had agreed to maintain the pavement in

IT'S LARGELY UP TO THE ORGANIST

By KEN WRIGHT

BACK IN THE days when we used to hammer out melodies (?) on a cheap piano in a five-and-ten, we didn't have to wonder what to play. Just one grand mess of current ragtime with no respect for patrons or pictures.

I remember well when the manager of one of those places gave me a lecture for trying to cue a picture. I use the word trying advisedly, for what did I—or he—know about it? The art—and the science—of the organ accompaniment and solo were then yet to be developed. But developed they were, and because of that development, one of the theatre's greatest, most potent divertissements was created.

And that is why I believe that fundamentally the organ feature can be made as important a draw as it ever was. Perhaps even more than it became following introduction of the talking picture.

It was predicted at the outset by many showmen that the all-mechanical program would lose a measure of its appeal when the sound screen lost its novelty. I think that time has come. Is there anything in current box office receipts to indicate that it has not?

As in many fields, the fault may not lie in the idea, but in its execution. Perhaps it has never been the idea of the organ feature that has seemed dispensable. Any weakness in this part of the program commonly lay in the manner of conducting it.

Just as in the nickelodeon days of the motion picture, when anything went because nothing much was expected, the organ feature later needed but little expert planning, because its newness was enough to get it by on any scale. But of course it did require more study than it had in the early days of the organ in the theatre, and today the organ feature needs attention correspondingly greater.

If the organist can write his own community stunts, more power to him. I wrote one of two, which for no good reason, the people sang. But with many companies who do nothing but make novelties of this sort, one can get endless material to work with. Every struggling musician has tried a popular song—and it's fun, too! But for more practical fun, try writing a community novelty—parodies, etc.—and you'll find it much more enjoyable, and perhaps your patrons will, also.

Being one of the first to introduce the microphone into organ solos, I'd like to mention here to those who have never tried it, that it is sure-fire for getting audiences to sing, and also for putting over many other ideas. By speaking your gags instead of using so many slides, you can add a little of that personal touch so essential to organ work. (And it is this personal touch that most theatres, with nothing but shadows to offer, need so badly to create that necessary habitual attendance!)

Then try singing into the "mike" to get the audience started. You don't have to sing too well—you'd be surprised how a "mike" will flatter your voice. You know, an organist today must be a vaudeville act in one sense to put over his stuff. I have heard some wonderful concert organists, but in the theatre we have to give the average patron what he understands, for that is what naturally he wants. Occasionally we can work in a few of the better classical numbers, as there are always a few in the audience who appreciate them, but for the most part, new ideas in a popular vein are best accepted.

REGARDING the organist's function as a novel, more intimate kind of vaudeville act: The organist is the most handicapped performer in the world. Who ever heard of an actor working with his back to the audience? And never opening his mouth to say anything?

The "mike" breaks down this barrier between organist and audience to a great extent, and a few timely wisecracks aimed at the audience during a community novelty will click better than one would imagine. The patrons find that the organist is human after all (at least they get to think so, even if the organists themselves know better!), and they are with him, so to speak, throughout the entire solo.

If one has a split-week policy, he can work in varied novelties for one type of crowd, and community singing for another. Some will sing, and some won't. When I say that some won't sing, I don't mean that they close up like clams. They sing but they would rather listen to something well-played, which their singing shows. With the aid of the orchestra—soloists, either instrumental or vocal—or a scrim presentation based on popular or semi-classical music, one can find many ways of entertaining this type of patron.

I recently introduced a type of "mike" novely that employs no slides. It might be called a play, or an act, with the organ as a background. It usually contains a story which the organ illustrates by playing songs with names, or themes, which supply the thought that is to be brought out in the number.

Many of these new popular songs will suggest a theme about which one can build a solo by adding a story, other tunes, etc.

The organ has proved itself too valuable a means of entertaining the average patron, and injecting divertissement into the now overly stereotyped motion picture theatre program, for its powers not to be taken advantage of. I don't like to appear too persistent, but I firmly believe that if we keep on working up to new standards in the future, the theatre organ can't help but develop into a more and more resourceful draw for the box office.

THE MODERN THEATRE ON MAIN STREET

As this class of motion picture theatre is exemplified in the new Warner in Torrington, Conn., a 2,000-seat house of an architectural pattern designed to be no less of today than its facilities

The two views on this page, and that on the opposite page, show the modern execution of a fantastic theme that characterizes the Warner in Torrington. The view at left is of the lobby, that below of the auditorium toward the rear, while the auditorium looking toward the proscenium arch is pictured on the next page.

[The following discussion embodies much of the comment of the architect, Thomas W. Lamb of New York, made in supplying certain data concerning the design and construction of the Warner in Torrington.]

THE NEW Warner theatre in Torrington, Conn., was conceived with close attention to the character of a town representing in population a cross-section of American small city life. And one of the conditions that modern life has imposed upon all who would serve this type of community, is that its citizens are well informed as to the nature of the fine metropolitan theatre and are quickly sensitive to any attempt to give them, within scale, anything less.

The growth of the motion picture and the development of its theatres has given the architect a widened opportunity for the full play of his genius. But at the same time this growth and development of the entertainment has come to exact more. As the motion picture has grown more complex, more complex has become the business of providing for its proper exhibition, and in the town of limited population, these provisions are as necessary as they are in the great city. The Warner in Torrington represents an attempt to fulfill this need.

The spirit of this age pervades every element and accommodation. The architecture and decorative treatment carries out a gay, colorful theme in modern patterns. Stage facilities look toward future growth of the city, as well as taking care of the present. With the adoption of the wider screen, this theatre will be readily adaptable to it. Complete air-conditioning is provided for. Good acoustical conditions were sought in provisions made in the plans.

The decorative scheme is based on a background of simplicity pointed with ornamentation in bas-relief. Instead of any accentuated features, the general pattern is even, with multi-colored light effects diffused over it from concealed sources in wall and ceiling.

The auditorium seats 2,000 on two floors, and the soffit of the balcony is decorated with applique ornamental bands around charms of lighting fixtures. The lobby, foyers, promenades and lounges have been designed in the same general architectural style as the auditorium.

The exterior is essentially simple, with a series of set-backs and towering terminations providing a suitable background for a large vertical display sign. Like the sign, the marquee forms an integral part of the architecture and blends with the mass of the exterior composition and functions as a decorative element therein.

Among the acoustical provisions is especially rigid construction of the projection room to insure absence of vibration. Also, in the general design itself, walls and ceilings have been furred, while contours have been arranged to preclude the possibility of echoing recesses. The sound has proved excellent.

The architect takes the position that being a building requiring a complexity of mechanical equipment having fixed allocations, and being subject to a strict building code, the motion picture theatre does not readily lend itself to architectural treatment of period or similarly capricious styles. He has in the past employed such styles, but in the Warner in Torrington, he has employed a plan calling for "simplicity adorned." The method particularly lends itself to the creation of a deluxe metropolitan theatre—on Main Street.

THEATRICALIZING EQUIPMENT SELLING

The new method adopted by E. E. Fulton Company, displaying supplies in "sales theatres" and on the screen

FORMAL announcement by Carl H. Fulton, president, that the E. E. Fulton Company will abandon its present practice of selling theatre equipment through retail stores and universally adopt a system of merchandising from offices, has attracted wide attention and diverse comment throughout the entire motion picture industry.

Probably no step taken in the equipment business in the last decade will attract more attention. Many believe that Fulton has hit upon a plan so obviously practical they cannot understand why someone has not applied it before. Others regard it as an interesting experiment, the success of which time alone can register.

To Carl Fulton, the author of the plan, the plan, however, is no experiment. It follows two years of careful preparation and investigation. It has been carefully but quietly tested.

His confidence is emphasized by the fact that it will mean discarding thousands of dollars' worth of fixtures, closing, over a period of time, ten well equipped stores, and months of work—hard work—entailing traveling to all parts of the country and "selling" his doctrine to many people.

The immediate result of his plan will be the opening, within a few months, of 21 new branches of the Fulton company, giving it complete coverage of the United States. Under the old system of stores, complete representation would probably have required nearly five years.

So complete has been his preparations that the outfitting of a branch office can now be accomplished within a few days after the appointment of a representative.

Two important sales aids are a part of the general plan. The first is the "model theatre." For the past two years this has been a vital part of the merchandising at the home office of the Fulton Company at 1018 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. In a comparatively small space, a completely equipped theatre has been built, in which everything from the projection booth to stage settings have been installed. All phases of lighting can be demonstrated.

There prospective builders can examine seats, carpets, drapes, screens and the countless other items required to equip a playhouse. Over the entrance is a marquee. Display boards on either side complete the atmosphere.

It is planned to duplicate this theatre in three other cities, still to be designated. One will be in the East, probably New York City. Another will be built in the West, and a third in the South.

The second aid is a portable projector and screen, through the use of which salesmen can tell their entire story visually in the office of theatre managers. On 16-mm. film, various manufacturers marketing through the Fulton company have prepared the story of their product. It is planned to provide this equipment to every branch.

An idea of the thoroughness with which Fulton has perfected every detail of his plan is indicated in this apparatus. Every portable projector on the market was tested. The screen box was carefully experimented with. With the equipment finally selected, the "show" is on the screen within four minutes of the time the salesman enters.

In an office, possibly 20x12 feet, Mr. Fulton has set up what he believes is all that is necessary for an effective salesroom. Three types of theatre chairs and a projector are the only objects of size in the room. A table is piled high with samples of drapes, carpets and other supplies. In miniature are proscenium arches and lobby frames.

"Why the Store?" asks Fulton, in discussing this announcement. "Starting at the front of the theatre, consideration is given attraction signs and theatre front lighting. There are only four types of electrical letters to choose from—the straight letter, the channel letter, the neon letter and the flat glass letter. Four sample letters, together with drawings and photographs, are sufficient.

"In the selection of exterior and interior lobby display frames, samples of the different types of mouldings and finishes is all that is required, with drawings and photographs to visualize the completed product. Lighting fixtures, in the majority of cases, are made to order and decided upon from sketches and photographs submitted.

"There are only three types of theatre chairs—veneer opera chairs, the padded and inserted panel chair, and the spring seat and spring back chair. Samples of these three types, together with samples of velour, tapestry, leatherettes and other types of finishings, gives the buyer all he wants from which to make his selection. Carpets, and drapes, naturally, are sold from samples.

"So far as ventilating equipment, dimmers, stage lighting, and stage rigging are concerned, the store can serve no purpose. The only honest and practical method of selling projection room equipment is through actual demonstration.

"Our plan is going to prove more effective for us and more satisfactory for buyers than the system we are replacing, and the reduction of overhead and operating costs will be reflected ultimately in lower equipment prices."

MODERN PROJECTION

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

By A THEATRE SOUND ENGINEER*

THE MANAGER'S efforts at more economical as well as at better sound, must begin with his sense of hearing. Mere price is, of course, no criterion of economy. Many articles and devices of replacement, improvement or modernization are offered to the exhibitor today, and he must be able to form a sound judgment as to their quality. Nor is quality the only factor involved. There is also a question of suitability. In a field so highly competitive as that of supplying sound equipment and accessories, now has become, there will be many opportunities for the exhibitor to exercise good judgment. To do so calls for some elementary knowledge on his part of the technical necessities of his sound installation.

Among these necessities are those of adequate inspection, suitable precautions and rapid repair of any trouble that may appear. Every one of these factors has a direct bearing upon the suitability of any equipment that may be advertised or offered either for replacement or improvement.

Perhaps no single consideration of maintenance or repair is as important—and certainly none has been as greatly overlooked—as the educated sensitivity of the manager's hearing. The matter of just how good a man's ears may be is very often of far smaller importance—as will be made plain heaeafter—than the question of whether he knows what to listen for, how to listen for it, and what it means when he hears it.

This has always seemed to the writer the most important knowledge, in connection with sound, that any manager can possibly have, for it concerns the only way in which the manager can influence his sound directly. And the sequel should show that it can be of almost equal value in determining upon questions of purchase or economy.

As the first step, therefore, in the discussion of those aspects of sound maintenance and adjustment which are most likely to be of interest to managers, the present article is devoted to this question of the manager's ear.

Because of his professional affiliations, the author of this series has asked that his name be held in confidence.

This is the sixth article in a series designed to be of special practical help to the theatre manager and his technical assistants, offering in readily understandable form knowledge necessary for the proper judgment of the quality of sound, judgment of the requirements of the projection department, and judgment of the sound and projection equipment that managerial and purchasing departments may be called upon to purchase. The seventh article will appear in the October 24th issue.

I

The Quality of Sound

AS EVERYONE knows, sound is of a vibratory nature. We commonly hear only those vibrations which are transmitted through the air, although when swimming we may hear sounds under water, or by placing an ear to a wall, hear vibrations transmitted through plaster or concrete.

The air vibrations consist in slight changes in air pressure. An area of slightly lowered pressure will be followed by one of slightly higher density. Such areas of low or high air pressure travel at a speed of 1,000 feet per second and tend to spread or bend around corners or obstacles.

We "hear" these variations in pressure when they occur rhythmically, and neither too fast nor too slowly. If a complete cycle of such changes occur less often than 16 times a second, it will not be heard. Neither will it be heard if it occurs more frequently than 16,000 times a second. A complete cycle of sound includes one wave of comparatively high pressure, followed by one wave of equally low pressure. And these disturbances, as said, can be heard only when they reach the ear with a frequency of more than 16 per second, and less than 16,000 per second.

The ear responds more readily to some frequencies of sound than to others—the average ear is most sensitive to pressure disturbances having a frequency around 1,000 per second. But frequency is not the principal factor in determining the volume, or loudness of the sound heard. Loudness is governed chiefly by the intensity of the disturbance—the degree of difference in air pressure. Frequency is interpreted by the ear as tone, and different frequencies are heard as individual tones, or notes.

FREQUENCY IS TONE—NOTE—PITCH

The exact relationships obtaining between sound frequencies—expressed in figures—and the pitch or tone of sounds as commonly heard, are easily described, and are worthy of being thoroughly understood.

The lowest note on the piano keyboard has a frequency of about 20 cycles. The highest note, one of about 4,000 cycles. The range of the violin is roughly between 200 and 3,000 cycles.

An average man's speaking voice is pitched at about 240 cycles; an average woman's at around 480.

And a 480-cycle note, be it repeated, is heard when a complete cycle of changes in air pressure—one wave of low, one wave of high pressure, reaches the ear 480 times per second.

Fundamental and Harmonic

The ear can distinguish between one sound and another for only two reasons—difference in frequency or difference in volume. Yet everyone knows that voices reading the same words do not sound alike, that the same note, played with equal intensity on the piano and on the violin, carries with it, in each case, a special quality, which is the quality of the instrument that produced it. These differences in quality are due to the harmonies, or overtones, which are sometimes loosely referred to, in sound picture work, simply as "high frequencies."

If the reader will examine a sound track of RCA recording he will find, in many places along the track, tall peaks which project beyond their neighbors. He will often find that these tall peaks are spaced at regular intervals. It is these tall peaks that create the fundamental frequency, or tone, of the sound being reproduced. The shorter peaks of recording scattered among them represent the higher frequencies, or harmonics, which are superimposed upon the fundamental frequency, and which, when heard, impart quality, or individuality, to the fundamental tone. In Western Electric recording the same thing may be observed—rhythmic changes of shading at longer intervals can many times be traced among the abrupt changes of shading shown by individual lines, which often represent harmonics only.

Middle C on the piano is 256 cycles, and has the same frequency whether sounded on the piano, sung by a tenor, played on a violin or created by a factory whistle. But the sound of the note will be different in each case. In each case it is accompanied by a set of higher frequencies—little ripples on the main wave of sound, so to speak—which reach the ear at shorter intervals. In no two cases will the harmonics follow the same pattern. If they did, no ear could tell one instrument from another.

In the same way, the words of human speech are distinguishable largely because they are made up of harmonic sounds. The pitch of a man's voice may be placed at 240 cycles, but it will not appear completely natural unless harmonics as high as three or four thousand cycles accompany it.

Reproduction Imperfect

It is perhaps unfortunate, for the motion picture industry, that the recording of music had so large a place in the early days of sound. No sound system is capable of completely faithful reproduction of orchestral music. The bass viol creates notes as low as 40 cycles, and a good organ will go to the lower limit of human hearing at 16, when the sound, if loud enough, is "felt" quite as much as it is heard. At the other end of the spectrum, harmonics as high as 10,000 cycles are required. Present sound systems cannot deal faithfully with a greater range than from about 60 to about 6,000 cycles.

There is a second reason why no sound system can reproduce orchestra music in all its beauty—it does not have the range of volume, just as it does not have the range of frequency. A great organ can cause the rafters of the building to tremble, or it can whisper as softly as a child. But such extreme differences in volume cannot, as yet, be reproduced or even recorded.

On the other hand, present-day systems, when functioning properly, are capable of quite realistic rendition of the human voice, speaking and singing. Beyond this, nothing more than an illusion can be expected. The writer has often observed with annoyance a practice followed in some of the larger theatres of having the orchestra play while titles of the news reels are shown. Very often there will be a band or orchestra in the news, and the contrast is most glaring—the illusion is destroyed. On the other hand many theatres employ a singing organist or some visiting tenor or soprano, who uses the microphone with no audible injury to the artist's voice. There is no illusion about that reproduction; it is close enough to the original to be indistinguishable from it.

The business of the theatre, therefore, is to create the illusion of natural sound, just as the picture suggests an illusion of natural sight, in spite of the fact that it is without depth and most often without color. Artists do not complain of the visual qualities of motion picture reproduction, although musicians do of the sound. Of the two, the sound is far closer to nature.

II

Judging Sound Quality

THE MANAGER, listening to the sound in his theatre, will expect natural and faithful reproduction of all ordinary speech, and of the singing voice. Of orchestral music he will expect only an illusion, which, if he possesses a real orchestra or a good organ, he will be careful not to spoil by a too direct comparison.

But the illusion which makes an average audience accept an orchestral record can also cause the most careful manager to overlook imperfections in his sound. The will to believe is the foundation of the theatre. Imperfect reproduction is seldom observed by a hearing that is casual rather than critical. And critical hearing is achieved only through knowledge and practice. One must know what things to listen for, and train oneself in concentrating upon them only.

Critical Hearing

The ear that listens critically will not be subject to illusion. Specifically, the reproduction of harmonics should have the most careful attention. A relatively few sounds will be a sufficient guide to the reproduction of speech. The letters "s" and "f", the sounds of "ch" and "sh", must be heard clearly. There will always remain a possibility that these sounds have not been adequately recorded, especially in the case of disc recording, but if they are never heard in any given theatre, the sound installation in that house is not doing all that it should. Whenever these sounds are clearly audible, it will be observed that speaking voices possess naturalness and individuality. It is advisable, however, to listen for those sounds with eyes averted from the screen, or the motion of the speaker's lips may help create an illusion of their presence.

It is, moreover, highly necessary that the critical observer listen for the individual letters, and not take their presence for granted whenever the general dialogue is intelligible. The ear is a great deceiver. If only a portion of a word is audible, imagination will supply the rest. Imagination will supply missing sounds up to 40% of the whole. That is why we always understand every word of an introduction except the stranger's name.

In instrumental music the most important guide is the possibility of distinguishing one instrument from another. Their difference can be heard only when their harmonics are present. Where only one instrument is being played—a saxophone, by way of example—the peculiar timbre and quality of that instrument, and impossibility of mistaking it for any other, is indication of proper reproduction.

Absence of lower frequencies can be detected in such instruments as the piano or the kettle-drum, as well as by a general "tinniness" and "canned" quality.

It is, of course, not enough that all frequencies within the possible range of the sound system are present. Some percentage of them will always be present. They must appear in their natural and normal ratio. A very faint "s" in otherwise loud and distinct speech, an unaccountable loss of volume in the lower octaves of the piano (which normally are louder than the others)—these things are indications of imperfect reproduction.

Sound Effects

Many incidental sounds are outside the range of the best of present-day systems, and can be reproduced only by illusion, if at all. The sound of Niagara—the big guns of the fleet at battle-practice—are beyond electrical imitation.

It will be remembered that the projectionist is surrounded by noise. The speaker to which he listens is, in most systems, not capable of the same quality response as those behind the screen. The responsibility for detecting bad sound would seem to lie with the manager as clearly as the responsibility for curing with the technician.

III
Defects in Hearing

A keenly "musical" ear is not necessary for ordinary discrimination of sound quality. Tone deafness is a definite handicap, and one that cannot be overcome. In its milder forms, however, it will do very little harm.

Tone deafness is akin to color-blindness. Color is so far similar to sound, in that it consists in vibrations of varying frequency. A color-blind man is one who can see, but cannot distinguish between different frequencies of light as sharply as his more normal-eyed brethren. Dogs are said to be completely color-blind—they live in a black-and-white world, like the world of moving pictures.

Tone deafness is the inability to distinguish between different frequencies of sound as closely as the average person can. Tone-deafness, like color-blindness, is of all degrees. A man who cannot tell red from blue would be a poor judge of technicolor. A man whose only handicap was that he sometimes became confused between green and brown would get along with technicolor reasonably well. The man who cannot distinguish notes half an octave apart, or whose hearing is defective at the higher frequencies, will be a poor judge of sound quality. The man whose handicap is limited to an inability to distinguish half-tone should be able to judge sound moderately well.

Difficult Hearing at All Frequencies

The advent of sound pictures revealed that a surprisingly large number of persons are slightly deaf, and never knew it. A percentage of theatre managers must fall within that category, and many of the individuals concerned may be unaware of their failing.

A slight difficulty in hearing, if it applies to all the frequencies of sound, will not be a handicap to any manager, but he must take care to guard against it. No man should decree the volume of sound proper for a theatre according to his own ear alone, unless he has had his hearing tested and knows its limitations. In many theatres, even today, sound is too loud for comfortable hearing by normal ears. Patrons distressed by excessive volume very seldom know the cause of their displeasure. They know only that a visit to the theatre leaves them slightly irritated—somewhat exhausted nervously.

The manager can check on his own hearing by consulting his patrons and his staff. He must, however, be on his guard against individuals in both groups who come under the head of persons that are hard-of-hearing and don't know it.

Dialogue, except for purposes of theatrical effect, should never be more than just loud enough to be heard comfortably by the normal ear. No one enjoys being shouted at. Persons hard-of-hearing may be trusted to find their way down front, where, in spite of all attempts at even distribution, sound will always be slightly louder than elsewhere in the theatre.

IV
Hearing Sound Trouble

MANY OF THE troubles that sound is heir to can be diagnosed by the simple process of listening to them. Such are flutter, and all the numerous classes of noises that from time to time intrude their way into the most carefully operated installation. Hearing and diagnosing such troubles is another way in which the manager can assist.

Flutter

In its effect upon an audience, flutter is comparable to excessively loud sound, except that, if possible, it is even more annoying. As in the case of too much volume, the average patron will never know what annoys him. He will know only that he is displeased, and having nothing to complain of, is most likely to say nothing and just not come again, or not come so often.

It is said that no one can describe a color to a blind man. Similarly, flutter is an extremely difficult thing to describe. One must hear it and have it pointed out as flutter. Once that has been done, flutter will be no more mysterious than the color of red.

If flutter can be described at all, perhaps the easiest explanation would be to call it a ripple in the sound. A ripple that causes the sound to seem "sour," harsh and unnatural. It is occasioned by some pulsation, some unsteadiness of the film passing before the photocell, or of the disc record rotating under the needle. It might, perhaps, be called a tremolo where no such effect was intended.

Flutter can be heard most easily in music, and especially in the piano. A practiced ear can also detect it in the speaking voice, although not to the same extent. However, its presence will result in a loss of the higher frequencies, so that this trouble in reality works a double injury to the quality of sound.

Noise

Noise is of many kinds and has innumerable causes. An accurate description of the noise is the first necessity for anyone attempting to run down its cause and effect a cure. In sound terminology, a distinction is made between noise and hum. Hums are noises having a definite tone, or frequency.

Hums

Hums are most usually of low frequency, especially of the frequency of the alternating current line supply. This will be 50 to 60 cycles in all except a very few locations in the United States. Defective grounding of some portion of the installation is perhaps the chief cause for hums at line frequency.

Another form of hum, often called airplane noise, motorboating, or by some such term, is caused by a misalignment of the film, so that either the sprocket holes at the edge of the celluloid, or the dividing lines between frames crosses the exciting light and varies the amount of that light reaching the photocell. Sprocket-hole noise and framing-line noise sound nearly alike, but not quite. The former is higher in pitch. This particular trouble can be corrected while the projector is running, through adjustment of the film guides. It is important, however, that the projectionist know which forms the trouble he is attempting to correct, in order that he may move the guides in the right direction. It is important, also, that persons listening to the result in the theatre, and attempting to guide the projectionist by telephone, should know when the projectionist has gone too far—when his attempt to cure one of these twin hums has brought on, not the same trouble, but its brother. It will

One-Contract Plan Assures Satisfaction

Maximum efficiency at minimum cost results are assured every new theatre enterprise or complete renovation job engineered under the Fulton One-Contract Plan.

The One-Contract Plan means that all phases of the enterprise are carefully considered in relation one to another, not by a single specialist but by various experts and engineers, each working independently, yet co-operatively and with full knowledge and understanding of each other's activities.

Under the scrutiny of these engineers, faults of plan or proposed equipment specified in original plans are unerringly spotted and rectified in advance of installation.

Equally important to the completed job is the assurance of proper installation—your guarantee of proper performance from the right equipment.

Thus the One-Contract Plan offers a sure check on lost motion, wasteful purchases and insurance that real economy will prevail from start to completion of the theatre job.

be remembered (once again) that the projectionist, hampered by the noise of his machinery, will not be able to hear small disturbances that are audible in the house.

The manager can teach himself to distinguish between these brother nuisances by asking his projectionist to create a deliberate misalignment of the film in both directions, some time during a rehearsal, or upon some other occasion when it will do no harm.

Hums of other than the lowest frequency are somewhat unusual, but they occasionally occur. Their sound is the best guide to their cause, and can often be identified as the sound of some motor whose defective commutator or brushes are giving rise to the trouble. Occasionally such a hum can be recognized as having the same frequency as that of some particular electrical circuit, as, for example, when speed control boxes of the frequency-filter type, are defectively grounded.

Irregular Noises

Noise being sounds of varying frequency, is generally distinguished from hum, which has a definite tone. Noise has many causes. As is the case with hums, finding the cause is often facilitated by accurate recognition of the type of the noise.

A microphonic tube in the photocell amplifier will give rise to a noise that more or less resembles the sound of the projector. The same noise can be created by vibration of the exciting lamp or of the lens assembly. Snapping, scratchy noises are generally caused by poor electrical contact, which may be due to dirt in a small switch or in a rheostat, insufficient tension at any such pressure connection, a high resistance fuse, a poorly soldered joint, or any similar flaw in the equipment. A snapping or raspy noise may also be occasioned by defective dry cell batteries, or by storage batteries in need of charging.

V .....

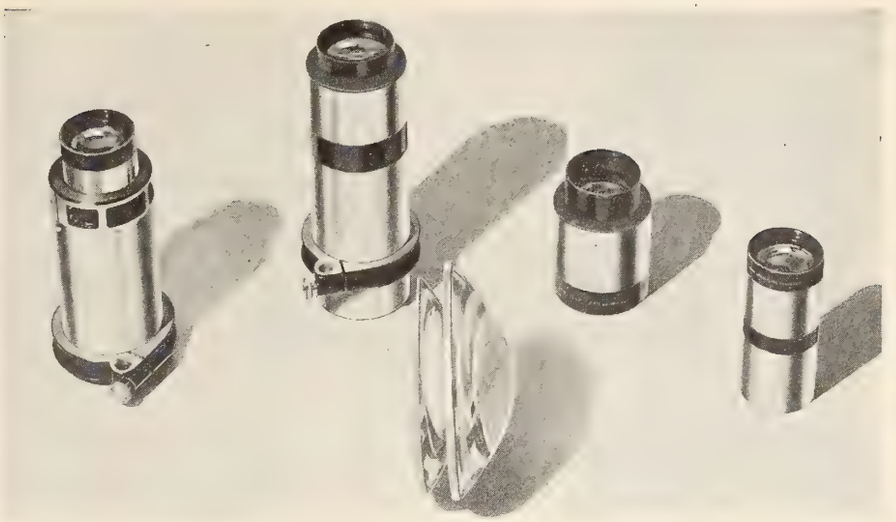
Overloading

A WEAK TUBE, unable to carry its proper current, or excessive volume, beyond that which any tube is expected to carry, may be the cause of overloading. "Distorted" sound, extremely scratchy and altogether unnatural, is the product—sometimes known as "blasting." The manager who has any doubts as to what overloading sounds like, needs only to "force" his radio. Overloading may, however, occur at reasonably normal volume—when a bad tube should be the first object of suspicion.

VI

Co-operating With the Projection Room

IN ALL CASES of trouble heard in the theatre, the manager can give invaluable assistance to the projectionist or the service engineer if he will note accurately the time the trouble first appeared, and which projector was then in operation. Information as to the effect of the change-over upon the trouble is of the greatest importance—a point managers are sometimes prone to overlook.



New Projection Efficiency

SUPER CINEPHORS are true anastigmats. They improve the image quality by overcoming astigmatism, spherical aberration and chromatic aberration. Pictures projected with Super Cinephors have maximum sharpness of detail, contrast between blacks and whites and brilliance of illumination. 50% more light is concentrated on the film by the new B & L Condensing system. This overcomes loss of light due to reduction of reflecting area of perforated screens. For finest projection use this condensing system with Super Cinephors.

FILM MAINTENANCE: PUBLIX'S METHODS

I HAVE had the question asked from time to time by various people, "What is the average life of motion picture film?" The questioners referred to film life as governed by mechanical factors. This is no easy question to answer.

Recently in conversation with Mr. Trevor Faulkner, who has been in charge of Paramount Publix film exchange operations for a long while, and who has built up a system in those exchanges which is not excelled anywhere else, it occurred to me that here was the man who might give us a lot of very valuable, authoritative information on damage to film, and things related thereto. Mr. Faulkner consented to discuss this important subject for our department, and to the end of this article, the following words are his—acknowledged here with deep gratitude.

THERE HAVE been numerous articles written on this subject, this one being the fourth or fifth that I have done in the past few years. In complying with the request of my good friend Mr. F. H. Richardson, that I do another one, I agreed—with the reservation that I would refrain from repeating the elementaries of the work, as they are so familiar to all.

We all know that dirt and oil, bad splicing, improper condition of projection equipment, careless exchange maintenance, warped and buckled film and scratched surfaces are the things that mar proper screen presentations of a product that has an enormous cost in its making, and is tying up the exhibition time of expensively operated theatres. It is therefore essential that a condition that can be kept to a minimum, be watched with care and attention by all concerned, so that it can in no way be responsible for negative box office results.

We are all so well informed on the various causes of the above list of damages that can occur to film, that it only remains for us to have proper follow-ups in our inspection and projection rooms, film depots, etc., so that we are constantly informed as to the class of work that is going on in each of these departments, and can anticipate and correct troubles before any damage results.

To be able to build up a routine of operation that will bring about these desired results, it is most necessary that the directors of this set-up be intelligently familiar with exchange film maintenance, theatre projection and its equipment, laboratory work, exchange booking routines and maintenance of exchange equipment used to inspect and repair film. The knowledge of these operations can best be attained by actual experience with them, to the end that one be so equipped that the solution of the various problems ceases to be guess work.

The company with whom I have been engaged in the above work for years, never has been satisfied with any film condition below the best that could be obtained and maintained. They have made it possible, through their willingness to grant time and to spend money, to analyze every film maintenance problem, find its solution and make corrections, and have always been persistent in demanding a satisfactory film condition. This thoroughness on their part has made it possible to have a set-up which has given them absolute first-hand control of these conditions.

To outline, as briefly as I may, a complete set-up that includes a full follow-up on every phase of this problem, I will classify the essential links in the order in which they occur.

The studios, laboratories, exchange maintenance, theatre use, film depot operations, and final disposition of film constitute a circle over which there must be some clearing house control, so that a close follow-up is constantly possible, in order that the observations necessary to adjust and correct intelligently when occasions arise, may be made.

The studio must light a picture and record sound to a degree of perfection that if screen results are not satisfactory in these respects, it cannot be rightfully placed to the studios discredit.

The laboratory must print and develop, always on a rush schedule, a product of a very delicate construction. Because of the fact that there are so many features of this work that require a 100% correct operation, a laboratory head can never be entirely sure of his product until final inspection of the finished article is made. There must be no inclination to be satisfied with the finished product unless it measures up to the correct standard.

Supervision of exchange maintenance of film must be stern and unrelenting, accepting no compromise that permits film conditions to be below a fixed standard mark. In exchange maintenance of film lies the most important link of the entire structure. It is here the most important of follow-ups must be maintained, both as to the positive correctness of the film card record of the condition of the print, and the theatre that is responsible for any changes in this condition. There have been many codes used for registering print conditions on the film record card. The one I have found the most effective is to grade film conditions as follows:

No. 1 means "Film good in every respect."

No. 2 means "Film is in good condition, except for a slight check in the corners of the perforations, or that it is scratched."

No. 3 means "Film is in unserviceable condition from any cause."

The above code would mean that all film between practically new and unserviceable film would be classified as in a "2" condition. Therefore, this particular number should be broken up in three steps: "good two," "fair two," and "poor two."

A universal understanding of this method of a code used for recording film conditions in exchanges makes it so standardized that film in a "good 2" condition in one exchange would be in the same classification in any other exchange, thus making it possible for every inspector to grade conditions alike, as we have a standard idea of the meaning of the words "good," "fair" and "poor."

There was a time when it was necessary to have men in the field in pioneering film maintenance work, but our company has been successful in building up a satisfactory exchange personnel, and has given it equipment and routines of operation, and maintains such a close follow-up on the work of each exchange and each individual inspector, that home office representatives are no longer required in the field for this work.

Our film conditions have become so improved under the above routines that the actual booking life of a print is exhausted long before the physical life of the film is broken down through wear. The only damage that is likely to occur to film maintained under proper condition is scratches, oil and dirt on the surfaces, and warping or buckling from the excessive heat from the later types of projection arcs. It has always been a known fact that film fresh from the drying racks or cabinets of the laboratory was quite liable to damage from being scratched, warped and buckled, and from the perforations having been pulled in passing through the projectors the first few times. This latter trouble has been kept at a minimum through the application of a thin line of paraffin wax placed over the perforations of the film. The purpose of the wax is to keep the faces of the tension shoes or the aperture plate tracks well lubricated, in the same manner that a cook always greases a hot skillet or plate before placing the food that is to be cooked on them. Without the paraffin wax the gelatin, while it is still green, would tend to stick to the hot tension tracks of the aperture plate, just as food would stick to an ungreased vessel. This leaves the two remaining problems of surface scratching and warping and buckling to be reckoned with.

Some recent developments in the chemical field have offered us a chemical that may be applied to film after it has been printed and developed. It promises to reduce surface scratching materially and to retard all warping and buckling of new film by seasoning, curing and lubricating the gelatin or photographic emulsion of the film.

After the photographic emulsion or gelatin side of film is thoroughly seasoned and cured, there is small likelihood of any surface scratching, warping, buckling or pulled perforations due to film conditions.

At our film depot, where every reel of film sent to all of our domestic exchanges, is returned for final disposition, a close follow-up of the class of work the exchanges are doing is carried on. Sufficient film from each return shipment from the exchanges is examined for the purpose of observing the class of work that that exchange is doing. When any faulty work is found, a descriptive report is furnished, and that exchange is advised what the fault is, and orders are given as to how to correct it. A weekly report from the inspection department of each exchange is furnished to us. This report is broken down and re-recorded on a master report of all exchanges, the totals of which show how many reels of films have been shipped, the total number inspected, the number of inspectors, number of days worked, weekly salary, number of uninspected reels in vaults Saturday night, and the cost per reel of inspection.

The average for the entire United States gives us a figure with which we can compare the work of each exchange and the individual inspector. Wherever the exchange or individual average is over or under the general average, either we must know there is a reason for this difference, or it must be corrected. By a close observation of the volume of work done and a check-up on the condition of film from that exchange, we are able to judge if it is doing the correct amount of work. We have one standard of what the film condition must be, and if film conditions fall below that standard, we usually find that the exchange is attempting too great a volume of work with its number of personnel. By the same token, if an exchange is reporting a volume in excess of the general average, a close check-up is kept on the condition of film returned from that exchange, to determine whether or not that volume of work can be maintained by it.

Due to the peak demand for prints of a subject during the circuit booking periods immediately following release dates, when booking dates represent big revenue, a greater number of points of a subject are made than are needed after this period has passed. As soon after this period as the exchanges feel that any prints that they have are surplus, they are returned to the film depot, where a number of them are kept on hand, fully repaired and renovated, so that at any time a print remaining in the field falls into an unsatisfactory condition, the exchange can secure a good print of that subject from the film depot reserve. This insures the entire field that so long as they have unplayed booking dates on a subject, a satisfactory print is always available. This also helps us out in the matter of replacement parts, replacing from the film depot reserve an entire print, or reel, instead of actual damaged footage. This is only possible in prints that have finished playing circuit bookings.

This clearing house control can best be applied by the cooperation of the research department, the laboratory director, the director of prints and their conditions, the exchange manager and chief inspector, the theatre projectionist and the film depot operation. Where each of these links have confidence in the functioning of each of the others, then it is reasonable to expect a satisfactory film condition in every respect.

The matter of film maintenance, while still a mechanical one, that is dependent on the class of work done in the exchange inspection room and the manner in which film is handled in the theatre projection room. The success of an organization for this purpose is largely a matter of follow-ups, general supervision from a source that has a positive knowledge of all phases outlined above, and the full confidence and cooperation of every one concerned.

It is the ultimate hope, which I am convinced will soon be realized, to have film leave laboratories protected against surface scratches, warping and buckling, and with ample assured life that will carry it through its bookings, down to its last playing date, offering a screen presentation that will be entirely satisfactory from the first to the last play-date.

THE POWERS REAR SHUTTER

THE Knowles Rear Shutter Company of Los Angeles is now ready to market a rear shutter designed especially for use with Powers projectors. This new device will no doubt be welcomed by those having Powers projectors, since it will modernize the projector and reduce the aperture heat by more than one-half. In fact the Knowles company claims a heat reduction of 78%, but that seems pretty high. Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that it will exceed 50%, and that means a lessening of the danger of aperture fires far in excess of that percentage. It also means a very great reduction of damage to film caused by the excessive heat produced by modern light sources.

It was found that the framing lever employed on the Powers mechanism could not be used if a rear shutter be installed, so the Knowles company has provided a new framing device which they say works superior to the old one, and it would seem that the claim is well founded. Framing will be accomplished by the handwheel you see below the flywheel.

It also is arranged that the shutter may be advanced or retarded while the projector is in operation—a desirable feature. The Knowles company also speaks of a "collapsible glare shield," though no explanation is provided as to just what that means. I presume there is some sort of glare shield which collapses when the Powers gate is opened. The company says: "This device becomes an integral part of the projector mechanism when it is installed. It will last as long as the mechanism itself. Also it sharpens the focus to a remarkable degree."

As to the lasting qualities, there is no reason to question that statement, but just what such a device could possibly have to do with "sharpening the focus" I am unable to see, unless the comparison has been made with a front shutter producing travel ghost. Travel ghost, even too faint to be visible except to one quite close to the screen, will work injury to the definition of the screen image. The focus is really controlled by the lens system.

The Knowles contention, however, is based upon the theory that the decreased aperture temperature obviates buckling of the film and causes it to lie constantly flat over the aperture, resulting in the sharpening of "focus" claimed.

CRATER DIAMETERS

SAMUEL R. RADSLEY of Kansas City, Mo., asks: Will you be good enough to advise me as to just what is the diameter of the crater of S. R. A. carbons put out by the National Carbon Company at various amperes within their capacity? I have had some argument with my projectionists regarding this matter and would like to know just who is right and who is wrong. An early reply will be appreciated.

"The projectionists in question try to tell me the light from the negative tip and the gas stream of the arc supplies considerable of the light. Is this true?"

The authorities tell us the negative tip and the gas stream of reflector type arcs using the type of carbon you name, emits from 9% to 11% as much light as does the positive crater. However, none of this light has the slightest use, since it is impossible to utilize it for the purpose of screen illumination. As to the craters, the National Carbon Company supplies the following information:

The 10-mm. S. R. A. carbon operating under 21 amperes has a crater .262 of an inch in diameter. Increase this to 24 amperes and the diameter is .278 of an inch. Twenty-four amperes is maximum amperage for the 10-mm. carbon. Force it much above this and there will be sputtering and trouble.

Using a 12-mm. positive at 28 amperes, the crater will measure .311 of an inch in diameter. Increase the amperage to 31 and 34, and the crater diameter will increase to .325 and .344 respectively. Thirty-four amperes is maximum for this diameter carbon.

Using the 13-mm. positive, at 34, 40 and 42 amperes, the craters will measure .347, .378 and .392. Forty-two amperes is maximum for the 13-mm. positive. If more current be forced through, look out for trouble.

Using the 14-mm. positive, with 44 and 50 amperes, the craters will measure, respectively, .404 and .419 of a millimeter in diameter. It is not recommended that current in excess of 52 amperes be used with the 14-mm. carbons.

It also is not permissible to use less than the lowest current named for each carbon diameter. If you do, you will be working very inefficiently, besides having a more or less unsteady arc.

I do not know whether or no your projectionists work in Kansas City, but if they do they should not set up so poor an argument. Kansas City projectionists have one of the highest wage scales in this country, or I have been so advised. If this is true, then they should certainly equip themselves with knowledge of all phases of their work. A high wage scale automatically calls for highly efficient work and excellence in results, and efficient results cannot possibly be produced unless the worker is well equipped with knowledge.

SCREEN OF MYRIAD LENSES

THE FOLLOWING is quoted verbatim from The Bioscope, England's leading motion picture trade journal:

A new screen with novel features was demonstrated during the week by Stereoscreens, Ltd. The specimen screen shown measured 22 feet, 6 inches by 17 feet, 6 inches, and consisted of a special fabric on which were mounted about 460,000 small lenses, semi-parabolic in shape. The lenses measured about three-eighths of an inch in diameter, and were attached to the screen by a cement with a high light-reflecting value. The spaces between the lenses were cut away for sound where necessary.

Although the screen is fairly heavy, there are no special difficulties in suspension. The lens patterns gives the screen a regular matt appearance when viewed closely; but this effect disappears at about 15 feet distance, and even while visible is rather pleasing than otherwise.

The demonstration took place in a full-sized theatre, half of the picture being shown on the regular screen, and half on the Stereoscreen. The comparison was startling. Whereas the picture on the regular screen (which was quite clean) showed dirty brownish whites and deep sepia "blacks," the other half was startlingly luminous, gave high lights of a bright blue white and jet black low tones. This result was most noticeable in connection with pictures taken out of doors by natural lighting and the added realism given to the picture was impressive.

Although the sponsors do not claim that this new screen is in any real sense "stereoscopic," it certainly does improve the range of gradations between the blacks and the high lights and in that way create a real feeling of modelling and roundness.

There is a tremendous increase in the brilliance of the picture, as might be expected, but this increase is of a restful quality, the effect being that of a picture softly glowing with its own light. There was no discoverable trace of distortion from any part of the house, and in fact the company claims that the Stereoscreen is a cure for that evil.

There are some very curious optical principles involved, especially from angular viewpoints; but the practical results are entirely satisfactory and the great increase in screen illumination and color value is undeniable. With color films there is said to be a remarkable increase in the brilliance and softness of the colors, but no color film was available during our visit. The screens are not sold outright, but are to be rented at a very low figure.

A screen of about the same size is in experimental use this week at the Gloria Palast, Berlin, where "Le Million" is being run, and the results have been enthusiastically endorsed by the Ufa people.

Tests by a Holophane Lumeter show that the increase in reflected light is very real and not imaginary. Curiously enough, the maximum amount of reflected light is not found in the optimum position. For instance, if the foot-candles measured at an angle of 5 degrees from the center line are 975, the illumination steadily increases as th eangle of vision until at an angle of 40 degrees the figure is 1,600 foot-candles. At 55 degrees the Lumeter showed 1,650 foot-candles, from which point it begins to fall away (at 60 degrees it was 1,300).

Results such as this need no emphasis and confirm the view that in Stereoscreens, Major Wentworth, who is handling them, has a proposition of great interest to the trade. We understand that as a result of the Berlin demonstration the company may shortly be in a position to make a statement concerning Continental rights, which in itself will be a solid guarantee of the seriousness of the claims made for these interesting screens .

I do not care to make any comment at this moment, other than to say that the proposition is entirely new and quite unique. It would be very interesting to watch a demonstration of this particular thing, which doubtless we shall have the opportunity of doing later—always provided it has the various advantages attributed by The Bioscope. However, as to the last, I will have to be shown.

RIDING ON A MERRY-GO-ROUND

THE FACT that you keep moving doesn't necessarily mean much—unless you move along some definite course toward a fixed object. You may ride all day long on a merry-go-round, but when it is all done you will get off within a very few feet from where you started.

To say you can't advance is sheer nonsense. I know a projectionist who is afflicted with very poor hearing. That did not mean so much when pictures were just pictures, but when the ghostly shadows began to talk, sing, play violins, etc., it was very much something else again.

Now the ordinary can't-do-it chap who was thus hampered would have promptly vetoed even silent projection. He would not have tackled it all all. This was not the can't-do-it type, however. He tackled projection in the days when few projectionists did much studying. He bought projection books. He joined the Bluebook School, sending in well worked out answers. He read this department and became one of its correspondents, and because his Bluebook School answers were good, and because he talked sound sense in arguments set forth in department articles, his name became not only known, but favorably known.

Sound came, but not discouragement for the man we are talking about. He set himself to master sound projection, though his hearing was very poor.

This man is today and has for two or three years been holding down a job as the key to better sound projection

Here is the clear, simple explanation of sound equipment, its operation and repair, needed by managers and projectionists. Gives the fundamental principles on which all makes of equipment are based. Explains their use so that you can recognize the nature of any sound trouble, trace it to its cause, diagnose its importance, take the right steps to correct it. Shows when and how repairs can be made in a hurry—when replacement of parts is necessary. Gives manager, projectionist and service engineer an equal footing for better understanding. Shows how to keep your show running, with sound of the best quality.

PROJECTING SOUND PICTURES
By AARON NADELL,
Publix Theatres Corporation; Formerly of Electrical Research Products, Inc. 265 pages, 6 x 9, 100 illustrations, $2.50.

Everything in this book is practical and explained in understandable language. Instead of describing all makes of sound equipment in detail, the author clearly outlines the fundamentals of mechanisms and circuits found in all sound apparatus, and which, when understood, make easy the location and cure of all sound troubles.

Covers theory and mechanical requirements of sound-on-film and sound-on-disc —projectors, amplifiers, rectifiers, loud speakers, motors, generators — their principles, operation, maintenance
—acoustics
—care of sound equipment and precautions to prevent trouble
—tracing trouble.

Better Theatres says "it cannot be economy to save a dollar on a worn part at the cost of many dollars worth of sound and screen image value." Projecting Sound Pictures shows how the important factor of sound quality can be maintained in the most economical way.

Perking Up!

SEPTEMBER ushers in a new show-season. It's like April to the farm. New life! Another period of concentrated effort. And everything must be put in readiness to "make hay while the sun shines." . . . And now begins your special time of the year, Mr. Showman—and is your theatre ready? Marquee live enough for another season? Worn projector parts replaced? Frayed carpets renewed? Now is the time to make your theatre stand inspection. For September is April in show business.

projectionist in one of New York City's finest, best theatres. There are several men on the projection staff of this great theatre, all of whom have perfect hearing, but he does his work just as well as any of them. Moreover, he is well liked by his co-workers in the projection room.

You see, men, this man did not tackle a merry-go-round. He started out to go somewhere. He worked hard for success. Success therefore, was his, just as success usually crowns the efforts of any man who works hard, intelligently and consistently for it. He did not get into such a job as he holds in a few days, weeks or months. It required years, and those years were filled with real, intelligent effort.

Gentlemen, fix your eyes upon some definite thing ahead of you and higher up. Make up your mind you are going to reach that particular thing. Pick something really worth striving for and then strive. Merry-go-round riding is all very well, but you get off where you get on.

THE MEANING OF THE TERM "MU"

RECENTLY Richard M. Thomason of the Electric Theatre, Curtis, Neb., asked the two questions: "After several unsuccessful attempts to find answers to the following questions, I must turn to the only authority anyone can depend upon, namely, your department. The questions are: First, what is the meaning of the mu, used in sound writings? There is a theoretical and a practical mu. Kindly explain what their relation is. Second, what particular effects on sound do transformers and resistance coupling have? What is the cause of and remedy for cross-talk in RCA installations?"

As to mu, I can only give you the definitions set forth by two very able sound engineers. They are as follows:

"If you apply an alternating current of, say, two volts, to an input circuit and obtain in the output circuit a voltage of 10, the mu amplification factor of the vacuum tube would be said to be five. This factor may be determined by certain electrical tests, or it may be foretold with some degree of accuracy from the size and spacing of the physical elements contained in the tube."

Another authority, and a very real one, too, defines mu as follows:

"Mu refers to the ratio of amplification obtained from a vacuum tube. It signifies the theoretical maximum amplification, which can never, of course, be obtained."

As to a theoretical and practical mu, perhaps there really is such a thing, but if so, two very able engineers know nothing of it. As to the above definitions, I doubt their possible value to any save the expert engineer engaged in designing, experimenting with, or manufacturing, vacuum tubes.

As to the second question, there is no difference between two amplifiers, one of which is transformer-, and the other resistance-coupled, assuming, of course, that proper precautions have been observed in the matter of design. A resistance coupling lends itself particularly to low level stages. On the contrary, a transformer coupling lends itself to high level and power stages. However, it is only in extreme cases that only one type may be used.

Cross-talk in RCA Photophone equipment may be caused by several possible conditions, the most common of which is dirty contacts in the fading device, of which there are several in use in various types of equipment. However, the above is equally true of all types. A careful cleaning of the fader—not only the contacts, but also other parts where dirt may be forming a bridge across insulation on the fader arms—usually will cure the trouble.

Please understand clearly that it is difficult to set forth an answer covering all possible causes and remedies for cross-talk. If what has been suggested does not cover this case, or any other case, it will then be in order to take the matter up with the local service engineer. In fact, it is better to consult him anyhow.

THE FULCO PROJECTOR

BY INVITATION of the E. E. Fulton Company, I visited that firm's New York City salesroom and inspected the new Fulco motion picture projector, now being marketed by that company. C. H. Fulton, president, takes considerable pride in this particular piece of apparatus, which has many unique features. It is, in fact, in many respects quite radically different from the motion picture projectors now in use in this country and Canada.

To begin at the beginning, the pedestal of the Fulco projector is so designed that it is very rigid. In addition the pedestal offers the advantages of a tilting, raising and lowering device, controlled by conveniently located hand-wheels, and an adjustment by means of which the picture on the screen may be moved sidewise in either direction.

The mechanism housing is all of cast iron, which reduces to a minimum any possibility of warping from heat, thus practically eliminating all likelihood of working parts getting out of alignment. The housing is divided into two entirely separate compartments, one of which (the left hand one as we look toward the screen) we will term the gear compartment, contains all the gearing, etc. The other (operating side, which we will call the film course compartment) contains the various sprockets, etc.

The gear compartment is covered with an easily removable metal plate, which makes an oil-tight joint with the mechanism casing. Located in this cover is an opening about 6½ inches in diameter, covered by an oil-tight door held by a substantial hinge and a sturdy thumb screw. By opening this cap, or door, the entire intermittent movement may be quickly and easily removed.

The gears are made from a very fine grade of cast iron and tool steel, except for two of them, which are of bronze. With two exceptions, all gears have heli-cally cut teeth. The width of the gear teeth is approximately seven-sixteenths of an inch.

The intermittent movement consists of a regular star and cam of the Geneva type, but the star is almost twice the diameter of the stars we have been accustomed to. The cam is also of equally generous dimensions. The movement is certainly a beautiful piece of mechanism. It is perfectly balanced and runs as smoothly as a high-grade watch. The pin that moves the star is, in fact, a roller pin, which, of course, reduces friction to a minimum. The pin may readily be removed by the projectionist and a new one installed. An odd and valuable feature is that this pin is supported at both ends. The star and cam are assembled in a casing. The entire intermittent movement unit, casing, flywheel and sprocket may be instantly removed merely by taking off a nut and its lock-nut. You merely remove the two nuts, pull the entire movement out, and that's that.

Framing is effected by advancing or retarding the intermittent sprocket on its axis. This is done by rotating the entire intermittent movement, which is pivoted on the same axis as the sprocket. This method of framing obviates the necessity for changing the distance between the intermittent sprocket and the aperture—itself a valuable feature. The rotating shutter is located in front of the lens. It has an arrangement which I have always advocated for front shutter projectors; namely, an extension shaft, which enables the projectionist to alter the distance of the shutter from the lens within a range of two and three-quarters of an inch, thus making it possible, in most cases, to locate the shutter at the aerial image, which is its most efficient position.

This shutter has the most unique and excellent method for setting that I have as yet examined. On the front end of the shutter shaft is a small external gear, with straight-cut teeth, about 40 in number. On the hub of the shutter is a steel collar, knurled on the outside. This collar is kept in place over the gear by a spring. Two pins at opposite positions in the circumference of the collar extend inward and engage with the teeth of the gear and thus connect the shutter shaft and the shutter. To change the setting of the shutter it is only necessary to push the collar back, thus disengaging the pins from the teeth of the gear. The shutter may now be adjusted, advanced or set back, to any desired position, whereupon the collar is allowed to spring into place instantly, locking the shutter to the shaft. This whole operation may be very quickly done. No tools are required. In addition to the above, there is an arrangement by means of which the shutter may be retarded or advanced, within certain limits, by the projectionist, while the projector is in operation.

The oil system employed by the mechanism is something entirely different from anything I have ever seen. About one-half a pint of oil is poured into the base of the gear compartment, following which lubrication is entirely automatic. A small gear-type oil pump, directly connected to the take-up sprocket shaft, has its intake at the bottom of the gear compartment. This pump forces the oil to the small oil tank located on top of the mechanism casing. This tank is fitted with a strained and sight glass, so that the projectionist may at any time observe the oil passing through the tank, and thus be assured that the oil system is functioning properly. Oil pipes of generous size lead from this tank to the various parts of the mechanism requiring lubrication. The oil ultimately returns to the bottom of the gear compartment and is used over and over again.

This projector has a front shutter which, of course, means that the aperture is subjected to the full heat of the light beam. However, a means for cooling the films is provided, which I am informed has been in operation for quite some time in some foreign countries with excellent success.

In conjunction with the projector, a motor-operated air pump is connected to the projector aperture by means of suitable piping. It forces a jet of moist air across both the front and rear of the aperture. I don't care to comment on the effect of this procedure, because as yet I have not had the opportunity either to observe it or to get reports from practical projectionists upon its operation.

The film course compartment is entirely enclosed. It is fitted with the usual hinge type of door, with glass, which may be opened for threading, etc. The right hand side, top, back, bottom and front may readily be removed as one unit by the removal of six screws, thus exposing to full view of all units within the compartment. It is not, however, necessary to remove this cover in order to replace any of the sprockets, rollers or the tension shoes. The upper and lower sprockets of the Fulco projector are 1 9-16 of an inch in diameter. The intermittent sprocket is, of course, of standard dimensions. The removal and replacement of the intermittent sprocket is very simple. I am assured by the manufacturer that the results are extremely satisfactory.

To take off the intermittent sprocket you remove a large-headed screw in the end of the intermittent shaft, and pull the sprocket off. In the end of the shaft is a slot, with a like slot in the end of the sprocket hub. At the end of the shaft is a washer carrying a key lug which fits into these two slots, and thus locks the sprocket rigidly in place.

I am not going to commend or express any adverse opinion as to this arrangement. Personally I would presume the results would not be altogether accurate, but the manufacturer says they are, and I presume they must be. If that assumption is true, then the method is unique, both in its simplicity and efficiency.

The gate opens forward instead of backwards, as in the Powers. The tension shoes are of steel, and are 4½ inches in length. A set of wooden shoes are furnished for the new film on which the emulsion is soft. The tension may be adjusted by the projectionist. The arrangement is excellent for this adjustment. The film does not run on the aperture plate, as there is a set of removable shoes that fit across it. Both the front and rear set of tension shoes may be changed within the interval of a minute or two. The aperture is designed with two openings, one for 35-mm. and the other for sound on film. The cooling plate is in two sections, the inner of which is about five sixteenths of an inch from the gate casting, the second about one-fourth of an inch in front of the back one. The rear of the casting contains the aperture. It is corrugated deeply, which will add quite largely to the dissipation of heat.

VELOCITY MICROPHONE

A CHICAGO projectionist writes: "Quite a while since I've written 'our' department, Rich, but you can safely bet I don't miss a word of it, either weekly or in BETTER THEATRES. May your shadow never grow less, nor your pen lose its cunning.

"And now for the question which caused this letter: Last week a chap asked me a question about a 'velocity microphone.' I did not, and do not, know there is any such animal. Is there? If so, what in Hallelujah is it, and how does it work?"

I believe you have in mind what is known as the "Ribbon Microphone," the activating element of which consists in a very light (thin) ribbon of metal. It is not, I am advised, more than two one-thousandths of an inch thick.

This "ribbon" is suspended in a magnetic field in such manner that it may be reached on each of its sides by sound waves. When sound waves reach this ribbon, it (the ribbon) is vibrated, and the vibrations cause an inductive effect which sets up emf corresponding exactly to the frequency and strength of the sound impulses which set up the vibrations. I might add that such a microphone is quite directional, which is an advantage under some conditions.

I do not know positively that the instrument I have told you of is the one you have in mind, but it has been referred to as a "velocity microphone" and I know of no other one which has been thus designated. You may be able to secure further data concerning this instrument, I believe, by applying to the RCA Photophone Research Department, 511 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

FILM DAMAGE

I HAVE been asked to name the parts of the projector most likely to inflict damage upon the film. That particular thing requires some thought.

First, failure of the reel to revolve freely in the upper magazine may cause ripping or straining of sprocket holes. A too-free running reel in the upper magazine may cause either ripping of sprocket holes, or a pulling in two of the film, because when the projector is stopped the reel will continue to revolve and run off a lot of loose film. Then when the projection starts the projector and the loose film is run through, the reel must be started at full speed instantly, which means a sharp jerk, of course, and heavy strain on the film.

The upper magazine fire trap rollers might stop revolving, wear flat on one side and accumulate emulsion, with the result that the film will be scratched. Badly worn teeth at the upper sprocket may cause damage. The collection of emulsion on the aperture plate tracks when running green film can and probably will cause damage. A too-heavy aperture tension causes considerable damage, both to the film sprocket holes and to the intermittent movement of the projector, plus all parts of the projector mechanism which drive the intermittent movement. Worn or old, hooked intermittent sprocket teeth do damage to the sprocket holes, particularly if the aperture tension is excessive.

In the sound head, about the only possibility for damage is the collection of spots of emulsion, which not infrequently occur when running new film. What has been said concerning the upper sprocket and magazine fire trap valve applies equally to the lower one. A too-heavy tension in the magazine strains the sprocket holes of the film and sets up excessive wear of the sprocket teeth.

These various things are all I can remember at the moment, but even if these are all, they are plenty. With the projector mechanism in perfect condition and perfect adjustment, it is entirely possible to project a film a thousand times without any appreciable damage, save that inflicted in the process of rewinding and handling.

A perfectly adjusted projector mechanism in a good state of repair inflicts, to all intents and purposes, no damage upon the film, save the slight wear on the edges of the sprocket holes caused by moving the film through the projector.

APPARATUS FOR SMALL THEATRES

I AM advised that the Operadio Manufacturing Company of St. Charles, Ill., has developed a new sound apparatus designed for use in small theatres. Its price is quite low, and the manufacturer claims for it great excellence in results. It is built especially for sound-on-film in theatres seating not more than 800. It is operated entirely by a. c. No batteries or motor generators are required. The photo-electric cell amplifier, the power amplifier and the complete power set are all contained in one compact unit, a view of which is shown. It may also be used with sound-on-disc and for microphone operation. It supplies a microphone current button. It may be used with any head using the caesium type photoelectric cell. The tubes are one 24, and two 81's, all of them low-priced tubes, readily available through dealers.

The amplifier supplies the exciter lamp, photoelectric cell and microphonic button current. A line voltmeter and control make possible the power line voltage. There are an ammeter and control which permits of adjustment of exciter lamp cur-

FOR 16 YEARS— AND STILL LIKES IT

IN A RECENT letter, L. W. Small, projectionist at Mock's theatre Girard, O., says, "I have long been a reader of the department and have thoroughly enjoyed every word of criticism and advice you have offered.

"In June 6 Better Theatres, you set forth a few facts about 2,000-foot reels and their advantages. Here's hoping your words have effect, because I, for one, have about had my fill of doubling up 1,000-foot reels and then taking them apart again.

"And about splices: They have always been a source of worry and even dread to me, for there are plenty of men in this territory who apparently have the idea that they are the only ones who will ever use the prints. They seem to have the idea that as soon as they are through with them the productions are put into the scrap heap, and believe you me, as you yourself often say, they do plenty to make scrap of them. They seem to think that if a print holds out until they get through with it—well, what more is necessary.

"I have been grinding 'fillums' since 1917. I find the work to grow more interesting every day, although it has long since grown past the 'grinding' stage. Sound reproduction appeals to me in a big way. Any projectionist who does not regard his job in the nature of a dignified profession nowadays, should be somewhere else than in a projection room. He might have in him the makings of an excellent blacksmith, since that requires a maximum of brawn and no very large amount of brains."

I thoroughly and completely agree with Brother Small with regard to the projectionist who has anything but high respect for his profession and who regards it is anything else other than a profession.

I also would like to direct your attention to Small's statement that after working as projectionist 16 years he "finds the work more interesting every day." Directors of projection for big circuits should keep a sharp eye on such men. Other things being equal, they are the ones who produce the best results and produce them most economically.

BUCKLING CAUSED BY HUMIDITY

GEORGE J. JACOBI, projectionist of Annapolis, Md., says, "In May the 9th issue I noted the inquiry concerning buckled film. We have just finished running a Technicolor print, and Friend Boss complained about the focus the first night. The second night the focus was not so bad, and Friend Boss insisted we 'do something' either to the projector or to the print. Such was not the case, however. I personally believe that print was affected by humidity, or else the buckled effect was diminished by close rewinding on our automatic rewinder. Heretofore buckled effect has sometimes got worse, but never better. Can you explain this?"

I cannot! I have never known of atmospheric humidity, no matter how great, to cause film to buckle, nor do I believe it would. If I am wrong in this will some one be good enough to correct me?

As to close rewinding taking the buckling out of film—well, I have never known of that happening either. I don't believe it would. The only possible cause which seems to me would fit the condition would be a faint smudge of something upon the projection lens which was removed at the daily cleaning. As a matter of fact, I believe it might be possible, under conditions of high humidity for water to condense on the lens surface during the night, which might possibly have exactly the effect you describe.

Such a fault would be removed merely by wiping the lens surface, and since that should be done by the projectionist every day, it is not at all impossible that this might be the seat of your unpleasant experience.

Maybe I am "all wet" on this. If any projectionist feels able to offer a better solution, let him stand forth and tell us what it is.

PORTABLE APPARATUS

● New portable sound equipment for 35-mm. film has been brought out by the Bell Equipment Corporation of New York. The complete projector and sound-on-film mechanism is 71½ pounds, and two projectors in tandem, including all accessories, wire fibre cases, etc., weigh (depending on type) 215 or 295 pounds. The apparatus comes packed for easy portability, in cases aluminum-lined and made of ply-wood and asbestos.

This equipment operates on ordinary 110-volt a. c. current, no batteries or motor generator set being necessary. Lighting is by Mazda lamps, 1,000 watts being standard, though 900-watt lamps can be supplied. Lens mounts permit of throws of from 50 to 100 feet.

Lubrication is by a full-automatic splash pump (and the apparatus comes with enough oil for three years of operation without further attention). The intermittent movement is mounted on special ball bearings. The oil sight on the front of the intermittent is removable without disassembling the projector.

A patented governor arrangement has been designed to control the fire shutter and projector lamp. An automatic switch stops the motor and douses the lamp when the film runs out or breaks.

Drive is by means of a belt running directly to the intermittent drive shaft, while the motor develops 1/5 H. P., 3,500 r, p. m., and weighs nine pounds. An air-impeller is mounted on the motor shaft for cooling.

The exciter lamp, optical system, and sound gate are mounted on the same casting, and the exciter lamp supply is controlled from the main control panel, with no switches on the projectors. In the tandem layout, both projectors are controlled from the same panel, with the panel carrying an ammeter for each exciter lamp.

Amplification is five-stage, all a. c. operated, with provision for filtered a. c. current to the photocell at voltage varying from zero to 200. Visitron calcium cells are standard equipment. The fader is automatic. Speakers are dynamic and come in pairs mounted on a 28-inch baffle (the packing case being the baffle when opened).

MEDIUM-SIZE CELL

● A photoelectric cell of medium size with a globular bulb has been developed by the G-M Laboratories, Inc., of Chicago, as an addition to its line of Visitron cells.

This cell measures two and 13 sixteenths inches from the bottom of the bakelite base to the top of the bulb. The bulb itself is one and 15 sixteenths inches in diameter.

Conditions being what they are, it is encouraging to note the report from the G-M Laboratories that the sales of Visitron cells, made through the National Theatre Supply Company, have increased 50%.

BY WAY OF NEWS

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

WE HAVE a theatre seating about 300 on an inclined floor, second story of a town hall. The booth is the Johns-Mansville type and is built on a platform about four feet from the back of the hall. The front of the booth is treated for acoustics, but we are greatly troubled by projector noise, which can be heard all over the hall. An excessive amount of volume has to be used to get above this noise. We desire to build a partition around the booth and cover it with the most economical material for the best results. Could you tell us what to use? Also, the approximate cost of material after the skeleton partition is built. The booth is about 12x8x7 feet, and the platform it rests on is about four feet high in front and about three feet high in the back. The top of the booth will have to be covered in some way, too. Will the wooden floor in the hall carry much sound out after the new partition is built? We have glass in all port holes now. Any suggestions for improvement would be appreciated.—R. H. M.

The Answer:

ACCORDING to your description of the booth, it appears to me that the booth is "leaky." It is just as necessary to soundproof the booth inside as well as outside, or better, build a new booth if the foundation justifies its load.

I suggest you build a new booth out of 8-foot hollow tile, or out of metal studding, which, of course, is lighter, and treat both inside and outside with an acoustic material. You can cover the floor with linoleum.

Should you want to retain the present booth, cover the walls and ceiling inside and outside with heavy insulation and apply metal lath and acoustic material. If the platform on which your booth rests is open underneath, be sure to close this on all sides the same as described above.

The only trouble you will have with wooden floors in the hall will be vibration. It will be well to reinforce and brace this floor as strong as possible in order to eliminate any disturbance.

CURRENT COSTS AND REMODELING

WHILE THE picture theatre business at present is not as good as during the period of prosperity, a great many exhibitors are taking advantage of this period to remodel or fix up their theatres, and they ought to be commended for their foresightedness in doing so, simply for the reason that when they have to close up their theatres now for a remodeling period they are not losing as much in box office receipts as in the time when business will return to normal. With business again as it used to be, they will be prepared to take full advantage of it.

Another reason is that after the transformation has been completed, a new interest is taken by the movie-going public. Many persons were getting slack in their attendance on account of the delapidated condition of the theatre in which they were in the habit of viewing pictures, but after remodeling they have practically a new theatre and their interest seems to be renewed.

In a canvass which I have made of several remodeled theatres, I found that the box office receipts have in all cases at least doubled, and a great many instances tripled. This canvass was not only for a short period, but I found in a great many cases this condition of improvement has been over a six months' period. Especially in houses where a cooling system had been installed we found no slump in patronage during the hot summer months.

The last and best reason for remodeling is the low cost at the present time. I really believe that prices never will be as low again as they are right now.

In the last year I have designed a great many transformations of old-fashioned houses, and I, myself, am astonished at the low cost. The majority of remodeled theatres were old-timers, some with high ceilings, which, of course, lent themselves to splendid results, and some with low ceilings, which had to be raised from six to ten feet, and some in such a terrible condition that in the beginning it seemed impossible to do anything with them, but all the alterations upon completion were splendid successes. The majority of the seating capacities were from 800 to 1,000. They were in most cases increased to 1,200. Projection rooms were rebuilt. New balconies were built of fireproof construction. New plumbing was installed, and heating plants were remodeled. All electrical wiring was removed and an entire new electric wiring system installed. New cooling systems were provided, and since the majority of these theatres were remodeled into atmospheric types, it meant new plastering for the entire house. New lobbies with tile floors and foyers, women's and men's rest rooms and offices were built, new fronts with marquee and attraction boards, also new ticket booths were installed. In other words, the patrons would see an entirely new theatre from front doors to stage without finding any trace of the old theatre.

Out of ten remodeled theatres which were located in different parts of the country, all of about the size stated before, the average cost was $25,000. This cost, of course, did not include equipment, but you can readily see that the present time is ripe to do this kind of remodeling at the lowest cost possible. Increased box office receipts will pay for the cost of the remodeling in a very short time. The average time of remodeling period was from six to eight weeks. So if any exhibitor or owner expects to remodel or modernize his theatre, it is now the most opportune time to do so, and this department will always be willing to give estimates and suggestions on any problems which he may have, and of course this information will be beneficial to any prospective builder.

One notes in some inquiries a tendency to expect to be able to make really very drastic changes in an old theatre at an extremely low cost. Economy is always desirable, of course, but it can easily be carried to an extreme. Doubtless now is the time, more than at any other just previous or to come, when the greatest amount of change can be made at a cost reasonably close to the amount some owners have shown themselves willing to pay.

LOCAL SEAT LIGHT

● Here is something that leads one to wonder why it wasn't thought of before. As must be well known by this time, Earl Carroll, exploiter extraordinary of feminine beauty, has an extraordinary new theatre in New York for his disconcerting activities, wherein there is much to arrest the attention, if not the principals. Among them is an item, small as things go in this big house, but one worth noting, nevertheless, particularly because it is so generally useful and adaptable.

This is an individual, or local, seat light. The main purpose of this light in the Carroll theatre is to enable patrons to refer to their programs at any time during the performance, when the house lights are lowered. But otherwise such a light has utility on such occasions when a patron drops a hat or a glove and puts on wraps. In general, it can eliminate that shroud of darkness that often seems to give the patron a sense of helplessness that is apt to be disagreeable.

The light, which was developed by Kliegl Brothers of New York, is fitted into the back of the chair without projections of any kind, and cannot catch on to clothes as patrons pass by. No wiring of any kind is required, each lamp being supplied by an individual battery. A light guard shields the light so that it illuminates just that area within the immediate vicinity of the patron's lap. Many a motion picture theatre would probably find it useful.

THYRATON TUBE CONTROL

● Thyraton tube control of stage lighting will be installed in the new RKO theatres in Albany, N. Y., and Denver, Col. Installation will be by the developers of this method, General Electric. The system permits control from a console in front of the stage, with a complexity of preset arrangements.

General Electric also announces the development of an indoor neon sign cable in ratings of 5,000, 10,000 and 15,000 volts. The cable for 5,000-volt service is a No. 14, 19-strand, single conductor, covered with a special high-tension rubber compound, a single braid of hard-finish cotton, and 12 individual coats of high-tension lacquer. The cable is slightly less than ¼-inch in overall diameter, and its weight about 50 pounds per thousand feet.

The 10,000-volt cable is similar except for a heavier coating of rubber. Its overall diameter is .350 inch, and its weight about 75 pounds per thousand feet.

Profits From Contented Audiences

People haven't changed in their theater likes since the beginning of theaters. Music, changing lights, personalities, illusive actualities—these are the causes of box office profits.

The 15,000-volt cable is a No. 14, 19-strand, single conductor of tinned copper with an even heavier covering of the special high-tension rubber compound. Over this is applied a single braid of cotton put through a flame-resisting finish, a single braid of glazed cotton, and 12 individual coats of high-tension lacquer. The overall diameter is slightly less than ½-inch, and the weight approximately 115 pounds per thousand feet.

The standard color of the finish is brown, but special color, such as black, etc., can be furnished at additional cost.

Another type of new General Electric product of application to the theatre is a photoelectric controller that responds to the increase and decrease in daylight intensity and thus controls flood and sign lighting circuits.

The new controller consists of a weather-proof case enclosing a light-sensitive photo-electric "eye," a vacuum tube, contractors' and time delay relays. A change in the intensity of the average daylight around the photoelectric tube is picked up by the tube which controls the grid of the amplifying vacuum tube. The vacuum tube operating on direct current actuates the main contactor through an auxiliary relay. The direct current is obtained from a rectifier and filter mounted on the back of the panel. The photoelectric tube by controlling the grid of the vacuum tube, thus indirectly actuates the main contactor. Thermal time delay relays are provided to prevent instantaneous operation in response to the passage of a cloud over the sun, a flash of lightning, a person walking in front of the unit, etc. Operation is positive in that the main contactor will not "flutter" at the critical light intensity.

The unit may be adjusted to close the external circuit at any light intensity between 1 and 10 foot candles, and to open the external circuit at any intensity from 1½ to 4 times that necessary to close the external circuit. Sensitive potentiometers are provided in order to secure close adjustment of the operating light intensity. Adjustments may be made without opening the case. This type of circuit provides great sensitivity by the use of rectified alternating current on the photoelectric and vacuum tubes.

PHOTOGRAPHING LAMP

● Theatres using considerable photography for exploitation and advertising purposes, and also making promotional trailers, will doubtless be interested in a new, inexpensive carbon arc lamp that sells for as low as about $4 complete. This lamp, called the Photo-Sun lamp, has been developed by the Blue Seal Products Company, Inc., of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The lamp comes in two models, working on 110-volts, a. c. One model gives an equivalent of two 1,000-watt incandescent bulbs, operating at from 10 to 12 amperes. The other model gives a light equivalent to 3,500 watts, and operates at 18 amperes, either a. c. or d. c.

dividual potentiometer to the "on" side of the pilot switch. When the pilot switch is in the normal or "off" position, a negative grid bias is fed direct to the connected tube units. By closing the pilot switch to the "on" position, the negative bias is disconnected from the tube units, and in its place is connected the grid control lead from the individual potentiometer. At the same time another set of contacts of the pilot switch completes the circuit for the pilot lamp. The brilliance of the connected circuits may now be varied by moving the individual control drum that operates the potentiometer.

If instead of controlling by the individual potentiometer, control No. 2 is to be operated by preset whose sliders may be set at predetermined points to set up the brilliance of its connected load for four scenes in advance, the tilting tab selector switch will remain in the normal or "preset" position. Otherwise, the setting up of the control circuit will be the same as explained for control No. 1. If all four-scene flasher buttons are open, the preset scene effective will be as shown on the preset indicator. The scene fader potentiometers for all control circuits are ganged on a common shaft and give smooth change of light from scene to scene whether one circuit is going up and another going down, all moving in the same direction, or individual lights changing at various ratios. In other words, a single motion of a single drum completely changes one lighting scheme into another. By means of two magnetic clutches mounted on the common shaft, the dimming faders may be operated by either the grand-master slow-motion handwheel, or by the motor. When driven by motor, the time of fading from one scene to the next may be varied from 10 seconds to 10 minutes. This is accomplished by means of two speed-reduction boxes with gear ratios 600:1 and 9½:1, together with a combination armature and field rheostat. An additional (scene selector) handwheel is connected permanently to the fader shaft through a set of bevel gears.

In addition to the scene fader assembly, there is the scene flashing control, which is so arranged that any preset scene may be flashed on without going through the dimming faders. For example, with Scene 2 on, Scene 4 may be flashed on without going through intervening Scene 3. Fig. 2 is a simple schematic diagram showing how this is accomplished with four push buttons and multi-contact relays. The number of relays required depends on the number of scene presets plus the individual control. The number of contacts required on the relays depends on the number of circuits.

Each one of the 36 control units can be set up and operated from direct feed in the same manner as explained above. Or, if desired, these units can be cascaded through sub-group or through group-master potentiometers, each of which in turn can be fed from the variable voltage grand master bus or from direct feed. Lastly, any combination of individual controls can be fed from the grand-master bus, without first going through group or sub-group masters. This will be clearly understood by referring to the main schematic diagram.

There are nine sub-group master potentiometers, foot-pedal-operated, each capable of electrically controlling any one or all four of the associated control circuits. To connect control No. 3 to its associated sub-group master, close the tilting tab transfer switch to the sub-group position which connects the positive side of the individual potentiometer to the moving arm of the sub-group master. In turn, the positive side of the sub-group master is connected to the common point of a two position toe switch. One position of the toe switch ties to direct feed, and the other position of the toe switch ties to the grand-master bus.

There are four group master potentiometers each capable of electrically controlling any combination of the 36 controls desired. To connect control No. 4 to, say, No. 1 group-master, close interlocking key marked No. 1. This connects control No. 4 to No. 1 group-master bus, which is fed from the moving arm of No. 1 group master potentiometer. In turn, the positive side of the group-master can be fed from direct feed, or from the grand-master bus, depending on the position of the tilting tab switch located on the center section of the keyboard. This switch is marked No. 1, "direct" and "master." All 36 controls may be connected to any of the four group-masters in a similar manner.

If it is desired to control any combination of individual controls by the grand master without first going through the group or sub-group masters, the set-up for connections is made in the following manner. Close the interlocking buttons marked "GM" for all circuits to be controlled. This immediately connects these circuits direct to the grand master bus. As previously explained the voltage of the grand master bus is varied by field control by means of the grand-master potentiometer.

IT MUST BE understood that all individual controls must be set up in a manner similar to that explained for individual control, even though they are cascaded through sub-group, group- or grand-master control.

The four house-direct controls are located on the left inclined panel, and each circuit consists of an individual potentiometer, together with a three-position telephone switch. Throwing the switches in one direction connects the positive side of the potentiometers to direct feed and the opposite way to the house master. Individual pilot lamps indicate when the circuit is energized. The grid leads from the arms of the potentiometers are connected direct to their associated tube units and do not go through the cross connecting relays. The house-master operates in the same manner as the group-masters. A three-position telephone switch connects the house-master to either direct feed or to the grand-master.

All four group-masters, the house-master and the grand-master potentiometers are mounted on a common shaft and can be operated by one of three methods—foot pedal, slow-motion, handwheel or motor. The foot pedals are permanently connected through a system of levers and operate at all times. Two magnetic clutches are associated with each dimmer plate for operation by either handwheel or motor. A three-position telephone switch is used for energizing either the handwheel clutch or the motor clutch. The handwheel clutch is mounted and keyed to the dimmer plate hollow shaft, and is connected to the handwheel through a worm and gear with a 48:1 reduction. The gear functions as the clutch plate. The opposite end of the hollow shaft is threaded, and the motor clutch is screwed on, while a set screw keeps the clutch in place once it is located.

The clutch plate is keyed to the common shaft, which is driven by the motor. The motor drives two gear reduction boxes, a 600:1 and a 9½:1. In turn, these reduction units have chain drives to two magnetic clutches, which are mounted and keyed to the common shaft. A three-poition telephone switch is mounted on the center section of the keyboard for energizing either clutch. Further speed variation of the motor can be obtained by a combination field and armature rheostat controlled from the keyboard. A motor switch is also mounted on the keyboard for running either "forward" or "reverse."

A terminal board containing approximately 800 terminals, is mounted at one end in the rear of the console. All leads leaving the console are encased in a special rubber hose 40 feet long, and they terminate in a plug board attached to the end of the hose. Standard radio jacks and receptacles are used for the control leads, whereas higher capacity plugs are used for the power supply. The console can be plugged in at two positions, one on the front orchestra lift, and the other on the stage near the prompt position.

To shut down the motor generator set and disconnect the power supply to the tube units, first open the "black-out" switch, then the "master" switch.

Relay Cross Connecting Panels

THE CROSS connecting switches are mounted on the control console, while the relay cabinets are mounted in the apparatus room, close to the tube units. Two side panels on the console contain the 110 load switches with a pilot lamp for each circuit. Thirty-six control selector buttons, and 36 pilot lamp buttons, are located on the keyboard associated with the 36 control circuits.

The four relay cabinets consist of 36 horizontal rows of relays, 110 in each row. Each horizontal row is connected with one of the 36 individual controls on the console. Each vertical row is connected to the tube control unit, its associated reactor, and, in turn, load. It will be seen that by closing any relay at the intersection of a horizontal with a vertical bus, any one of the 3,960 possible connections can be made.

By referring to the schematic diagram of the cross connecting system (Fig. 3), it will be seen that any circuit or any number of circuits may be connected to any one control. On the other hand, by means of electrical interlocks, no two controls can be connected to any one circuit. To connect loads No. 5 and No. 61 to control No. 15, the operation is as follows:

(1) Throw load switches No. 5 and No. 61 to the "on" position. (2) Close control selector button No. 15, which completes the circuit for the auxiliary multi-contact relay No. 15. Contacts of the auxiliary relay, in turn, complete the circuit to the coils of the two appropriate toggle relays, which remain in the close position until the coils are energized again through the "off" position of the load switches. Had control selector button No. 20 been closed instead, then these loads would have been connected to control No. 20. The complete setup for all circuits and controls is accomplished in the same manner. After setting up a given control circuit, all associated load switches, as No. 5 and No. 61 above, are returned to the "neutral" position.

By closing pilot lamp button No. 15, the circuit is completed through contacts of the toggle relays to light pilot lamps at load switches No. 5 and No. 61. Thus it will be seen that a visual picture of the board setup is available at all times.

To clear control No. 15 of loads No. 5 and No. 61, the operation is as follows:

(1) Throw load switches No. 5 and No. 61 to the "off" position.

(2) Close control selector button No. 15, which completes the circuit for the auxiliary relay as before. Additional contacts of the auxiliary relay completes the circuit to the coils of the toggle relays, thus disconnecting control No. 15 from loads No. 5 and No. 61. When any load circuit is not connected to a control, the tube unit receives a negative grid bias through contacts of the toggle relays.

Reactors and Tube Units

IN THE BASEMENT apparatus room is a rack approximately 33 feet long and 10 feet high, which contains 110 reactors and their associated tube units. One reactor per load is provided. The tube units and reactors are so mounted that all reactors may be easily disconnected and removed from rack without disturbing other equipment. The tube units slide into place on plates and are readily removable as all external connections are made by plugs and receptacles.

If trouble should occur in any tube unit during operation, it can be disconnected, removed from rack and a spare unit plugged in immediately without causing any serious delay in operation. All tube units are interchangeable and only require the setting of high and low end adjustments when plugged in. The tubes themselves are easily removable in case of replacements, and means are provided for compensation as the tubes age, as well as for easy testing. Each tube unit contains the control vacuum tube, the two grid glow tubes, and the necessary transformers, resistors, condensers, and fuses required for each circuit. The above equipment is mounted in a very compact unit with all parts accessible.

A.C. power supplied to the load circuits is stepped up from 115 volts to 125 volts by means of booster transformers. This increase in voltage is to compensate for the voltage drop of the a.c. coils in the reactors. The circuits are grouped into sections with the total loads approximately the same. Each group has its own booster transformer, together with separate a.c. feed to the tube units. In this way, if trouble occurs in the power supply to one group, it is soon isolated from the other groups so that all circuits will not be affected.

The type of control discussed in this article gives the operator, for the first time, the privilege of being in a location where the entire house and stage are at once visible. A highly complicated scene may be operated entirely automatically, yet always under the operator's instant control and vision.

Leases: Decisions of the Higher Courts

good condition and assume liability. It is interesting to observe that the higher court held the property owner liable, and said:

"The owner and not the tenant is liable to respond to the city . . . . . where a property is leased to more than one tenant . . . . . If he has a right over against a tenant because of contract or by reason of duty owing by the tenant to him, he may recoup himself by action against the tenant . . . . . Where premises are let to several tenants, each occupying different portions, but all enjoying or using certain portions in common, the landlord is in control and owes to those lawfully on the premises the duty to exercise reasonable care to keep such parts in safe condition, and, for failure to do so, is liable to persons injured in consequence of his negligence."

Damages for Injury

IT IS SETTLED law when one expressly, or by implication, invites others to come into his theatre for business or any other purpose, it is his duty to be reasonably sure that he is not inviting them into danger; and, to that end, he must exercise ordinary care and prudence to render the place reasonably safe for the visit.

On the other hand, the proprieter of a theatre is not an insurer against accident occuring because of the condition of the building, but, so far as the exercise of ordinary care will assure it, he is bound to provide and maintain a structure that will not, because of any insecurity or insufficiency for the purpose for which it is used by him, injure any person rightfully within it. These points of the law were upheld by a higher court in the late case of Cloutier V Oakland Park Amusement Company. (152 Atl. 628).

The facts of this case are that the proprietor of a place of amusement constructed a ceiling of inflammable crepe paper in decorative colors and designs. The crepe paper with festoons and streamers of the same material hung from the ceiling beams and from cords stretched from beam to beam as a thick canopy top. One night a patron touched a match to the paper and almost instantly the paper decorations were burned, igniting the building and resulting in serious injury to a patron. He sued the proprietor for damages, but the higher court held the patron not entitled to recover damages, as sought in the complaint, saying:

"The proprietor of a place of amusement, in maintaining such, is bound to exercise only the degree of care that would be expected of an ordinarily careful and prudent person in his position . . . . . .There is testimony that smoking was forbidden within the building, and placards to that effect maintained."

Failure to Repair

ANOTHER important point of the law is that neglect of a proprietor to keep the theatre premises in a reasonably safe condition may result in a great deal more expense. The latest higher court case illustrating this point of the law is Capstick V T. M. Sayman (34 S. W. [2d] 480).

The facts of this case show that the surfaces of steps were made of rich concrete finish, worked hard and smooth with a trowel, and had become very slick or slippery. An employee who was going down the stairs, and being unable in the dim light to see clearly the outline of the steps, stepped close to the rounded and worn edge of one of the steps. Her foot slipped and she fell receiving serious injuries which necessitated amputation of her leg. She sued her employer for damages and proved that the steps were slick or slippery and the treads thereof worn and irregular and sloped at varying degrees; that the stairway was not sufficiently lighted to enable persons descending the same with ordinary care to see clearly the outlines of the steps and treads; that because of the slick and irregular character of the surfaces of the steps and the insufficient lighting of said stairway persons descending the stairway were subected to the danger of slipping and falling thereon.

It is interesting to observe that the court held the injured employe entitled to recover $25,000, and said:

"The edges or 'noses' of the treads were rounded and worn . . . . . .The treads were slick at the rounded edges as well as farther back . . . . . The usual construction, as to treads of widths similar to these, was to provide a coarser and nonslippery surface by using what is known as a Mason tread or by giving the surface a 'float' finish which is coarser than a trowel finish, or by corrugating or roughening the surface. Such surfacing could have been applied to the steps in question practicably and at small expense either when they were first constructed or at any later time. The light in the hall was dim. The only illumination of the stairway came from an electric light suspended from the ceiling about 7½ feet above the edge of the landing. It had a shade beneath it designed to diffuse the light and prevent glare . . . . . Her evidence tended to show that the lower part of the stairs especially, including the place where she slipped, was so dark that one descending the stairs could hardly see the outlines of the steps."

Obligations of Person Injured

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a theatre owner who as a result of negligence of himself or employes effects injury to a patron is liable to damages and the extent of such damages cannot be reduced on the plea that the patron can affect a recovery by submitting to a surgical operation. So held a higher court in the late case of Billroy's Comedians V Sweeny, (37 S. W. [2d] 43). Here it was shown that a lower court allowed an injured patron $3,000 damages as a result of an injury sustained when a seat collapsed.

According to the patron, her ankle was sprained and she suffered great pain in her abdomen and back. The two physicians who attended cited other injuries.

The theatre owner appealed to the higher court on the contention that the patron was bound to submit to a surgical operation to reduce the extent of her injuries, and that the allowance of $3,000 damages was excessive. However, it is important to know that the higher court upheld the lower court's verdict, and said:

"Though it is the duty of the injured person to secure relief from his injuries if he can do so by practical treatment without serious injury to himself, or to have his damages minimized in proportion to the amount his injuries would have been reduced by such treatment, less the cost of treatment and compensation for the pain occasioned thereby, submission to such treatment has never been regarded as a condition precedent to the recovery of damages. Moreover, one is not required to take the risk of a serious surgical operation for the benefit of the wrongdoer, and his failure to do so will not reduce the verdict to mere nominal damages."

Owner's Liability in Employe's Assault

VARIOUS COURTS have held that a patron lawfully on the theatre premises for the purpose of transacting valid business, or entering the theatre, is there by invitation of the proprietor and if, while thus lawfully on the premises, he is unlawfully assaulted and beaten by an employe of the proprietor while acting within the scope of the employment, the proprietor is liable therefor. So held a higher court in the leading case of J. M. High Company V Holler, (157 S. E. 209).

In this case it was disclosed that an employe became angry at a patron and assaulted him. The patron sued the proprietor to recover damages. It is interesting to observe that in this case, since the assault was committed while the employe was acting within the scope of the employment, the higher court indicated liability of the proprietor.

Taxation of Royalties

IT IS WELL settled that an individual's income derived from patents or copyrights is not taxable directly as income tax. However, such royalties are taxable when received by a corporation. For illustration, in Thomson Co. V Commonwealth (176 N. E. 203), a state law was adjudicated which provides:

"Every domestic business corporation shall pay annually, with respect to the carrying on or doing of business by it, an excise equal to the sum of the following . . . .

Leases: Decisions of the Higher Courts

. . An amount equal to five dollars per thousand upon the value of its corporate excess. An amount equal to two and one half per cent of its net income. . . . . "

A corporation which had considerable income from patents and copyrights contested the validity of this law. In holding the corporation bound to pay the taxes as specified, this court said:

"The sole question is the constitutionality of the statutes under the Constitution of the United States. The language of the statutes is entirely general and in no sense specific save in the express exemption of income from bonds, notes and certificates of indebtedness of the United States. Plainly, income received from royalties on patents cannot be taxed as income to an individual recipient . . . . . The tax here assailed is not a tax on an individual and it is not a tax on income. It is an excise upon a domestic corporation for the privilege of carrying on business as a corporation. The distinction between an excise upon the privilege of carrying on business as a corporation and a tax upon personal property, such as is a tax on income under our Constitution and laws, is vital and fundamental under the Constitution of this Commonwealth . . . . . It may be added that this system of taxation of corporations by an excise upon the privilege of doing business as a corporation has stood under the shelter of express decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upholding its validity even though factors free from direct taxation by the states under the Constitution of the United States were included in calculating the amount of the excise."

Validity of Divisible Contract

IT IS IMPORTANT to know that any contract is void and unenforceable which is based upon unlawful consideration or if its object is illegal. However, various Courts have held that although a contract contains certain clauses which are in themselves illegal, the lawful clauses in the contract may be enforced providing the lawful and unlawful clauses are capable of being separated and comprise separate and distinct obligations. So held the higher court in the late case of Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation V National Theatre Corporation (49 F. [2d] 64).

In this case it was shown that a contract between a film distributor and a theatre owner related to distribution of motion picture films. The lower court decided that a portion of the contract was illegal and that other portions were lawful. It was contended by the theatre owner that the fact that a portion of the contract was illegal resulted in the whole contract being unenforceable by the motion picture distributor. However, it is interesting to observe that the higher court refused to uphold this contention, and stated the following important law:

"It has been expressly held that, where agreements in restraint of trade were unlawful in part, they were enforceable as to the parts that were not unlawful, and this holding runs back to the earliest authorities. . . . It would, therefore, seem, in view of the cases herein cited, that the proper rule of law is that, where the obligation itself is unlawful and cannot be performed, such performance should be excused, provided the contract is divisible and the remainder of the contract is lawful."

Applying Deposit on Debt

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a bank may without liability pay an indebtedness, as a note, from a deposit on hand belonging to the theatre owner, although the latter does not give his consent. The courts have upheld this law because funds in the hands of a creditor are implied as a legal payment for any debt owed by the owner of the funds.

For instance, in McCracken V City National Bank (22 S. W. [2d] 94), it was disclosed that a bank held on deposit for a customer $17,886. The bank held a note of the depositor for $6,630. When the note became due the bank, without consent of the depositor, paid the note from the money on deposit. Litigation developed over the legality of this procedure, and the court held the transaction legal, saying:

"As a general rule a bank may look to deposits in its hands for the repayment of any indebtedness to it on the part of the depositor and may apply the debtor's deposits on his debts to the bank as they become due. While the universal recognition of this rule has led the courts, on a few occasions, to make a general statement to the effect that a bank has a lien on deposits, the more accurate view appears to be that this right of a bank is not really in the nature of a lien, but is rather a right application of payment."

Advanced Rent

GENERALLY SPEAKING, where the rent has been paid in advance, under an agreement that it shall be so paid, and the lessors re-enters the premises because the tenant has broken his contract, the lessor is entitled to retain the rent so paid, although the re-entry is before the expiration of the period paid for which the rent is paid.

For instance, in Casino Amusement Co. v. Ocean Beach Amusement Company (133 So. 559), it was disclosed that a property owner leased to an amusement company a building under an agreement that the amusement company should pay $25,000 advance rent.

The lease provided that the $25,000 "paid at the time of the signing of the lease, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, shall be credited as rent for the last year of this lease." The lease also provided that, "in case at any time, default shall be made by the lessee, in the payment of any of the rent herein provided for, upon the day the same becomes due or payable," then "it shall be lawful for the lessor, at its election, to declare said demised term ended and to re-enter said demised premises," etc.

The amusement company defaulted in paying an installment of rent and the property owner filed legal proceedings to compel the tenant to vacate because failure to pay the installment was a breach of the contract.

The amusement company filed suit to recover the $25,000 on the theory that the money paid in advance as rent was merely a deposit, and that, since the tenant was deprived of possession of the property prior to the period of time for which the sum was paid in advance, it may be recovered. However, it is important to know that the higher court held the property owner entitled to retain the $25,000, and said:

"The general rule deducible from the authorities is that, in the absence of provision therefor, rents paid in advance cannot be recovered by the tenant upon termination of the lease, unless such termination was wrongful as against him. . . In cases in which loss of posession is due to the stipulation of the lease, he may lose his advance payment, but this is merely a natural and legal result of the stipulation for payment in advance. One who agrees to pay in advance cannot well complain if, as a result of the agreement, he is in a position different from that in which he would be had he not so agreed."

MANAGER'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR POOR PROJECTION

The theatre manager may not be responsible for the theatre site, for the quality of productions booked, for the equipment and decoration of the house but projection is something for which he is responsible. There are instances where managers spend time in complaining about the quality of photoplays available, when the projection at their theatres is so defective that discriminating patrons would avoid the theatre no matter what was on the program. Good projection is demanded today from everyone. Defective projection can make satisfactory entertainment impossible. Poor projection has put theatres out of business. Careless maintenance of equipment is the cause of many wasted dollars.

Director of Personnel,
Publix Paramount Theatres.

PARTS

HARM DONE BY POOR PROJECTION

It will be a happy day for the motion picture industry when all the theatre owners and managers realize that if they want a rock-steady picture they must expect to have the Intermittent Movement parts replaced before they show appreciable wear. An undercut sprocket tooth not only makes for unsteadiness of the picture, but also is very hard on the delicate edge or the sprocket holes themselves. This means that the film is unnecessarily damaged and replacement by new prints is required much sooner than should be necessary. This, of course, adds to the overhead of the industry which in the end must be paid out of box-office receipts.
